PREFACE.

THOUGH the Phormio is admittedly one of the best of the plays of Terence, no annotated edition of it suitable for college use has yet been published in America. This fact alone makes it unnecessary, I hope, to apologize for the present volume.

While the text of this edition is, in general, based upon that of Dziatzko, I have often ventured to deviate from his readings, prompted sometimes by suggestions that have been made since his edition was published, sometimes by a conviction that the testimony of the manuscripts, unless demonstrably false, is entitled to more consideration than arbitrary alterations. The Appendix is devoted almost exclusively to a defense of these deviations from Dziatzko's text and to the citation of authorities for statements made in the notes.

In preparing the commentary, I have had before me all important editions of the play and have taken occasional notes from that of Sloman and less frequently from that of Bond and Walpole.

I would here express to Professor Karl Dziatzko my grateful appreciation of his courtesy in giving me permission to use, in any way that might suit my purpose, the very valuable material collected in his own edition of the Phormio, representing as it does a thorough study of all the literature upon Terence and allied subjects that had appeared up to 1884. Much, however, has been done in this field during the last ten years, and the results of such labors have, so far as seemed desirable, been incorporated in the present volume. I have thought it worth while to append below a classified bibliography of the literature especially concerned with Terence that has appeared since the completion of Dziatzko's edition.

I feel myself under lasting obligations to Professor E. M. Pease, Editor-in-chief of the series to which this book belongs, to Professor C. E. Bennett of Cornell University, and to Professor H. N. Fowler of the Western Reserve University, for the searching criticism to which they have subjected all parts of the book. I am further indebted to Professor Pease for his kindness in placing at my service his collation of the Codex Parisinus.

INTRODUCTION.

The Origin of the Greek Drama.

THE Greek drama had its origin in the village festival that was wont to be held each year, at the vintage time, in honor of Dionysus, the god of wine, the bringer of good cheer. Dionysus, in the popular fancy, was supposed to have wandered through the world, accompanied by a band of satyrs and nymphs, spreading his worship among men, encountering countless dangers and hardships in his progress, now falling into the hands of pirates and thrown into chains, now aiding the gods in their war with the giants, now being torn to pieces at the command of the jealous Hera, but springing up again with new life, and finally triumphing over all obstacles and bringing joy and blessing to all mankind. It was customary among the country folk, when they gathered in the grapes, to celebrate the adventures of this god, whose bounty they were about to enjoy. One member of the company would impersonate the god himself, and the others would act the part of his attendant satyrs; and the story of the god's adventures would thus, in a rude and impromptu fashion, be enacted. Some parts of this story were bright and gay, while others were sad and tragic; and it was in these rude attempts to represent its different aspects that both comedy and tragedy had their origin. Tragedy, however, was earlier than comedy in reaching maturity.

The Early Greek Comedy.

The word comedy (κωμωδία) means literally the "song of revelry" (κῶμος, ἄδειν), or possibly the song of the κῶμη, i.e. "village song." The Dorians, and especially one Susarion (about 580 B.C.), seem to deserve the credit of having first dramatized the rude dialogue, in which comedy had its origin, and given it something like a literary form. The principal representative, however, of that branch of literature, before it reached the perfection it attained during the period of Pericles, was Epicharmus, a contemporary of Aeschylus. He was born on the island of Cos about 540 B.C., and from there, at the age of three months, was taken to Megara in Sicily, where he spent most of his life and where he died about 450 B.C. But comedy did not reach any high degree of development until it was taken up by the master artists of Athens in the time of Pericles. The conditions of Greek life at this period were peculiarly favorable for developing this branch of writing. The intellectual activity and the highly developed political life of the times worked together to bring it rapidly to a position of great importance and influence. Cratinus, Eupolis, Phrynichus, are the first to be mentioned as writers of the old Attic comedy, but these are of little importance in comparison with Aristophanes (fl. 427-388 B.C.), who soon appeared upon the scene and became by far the most important representative of this school. It lies, of course, in the nature of comedy to depict the gay and humorous; and at the time with which we are now dealing, the keen and absorbing interest taken by all classes in politics gave direction to the popular comedy. Public men and affairs formed its material. These were subjected to that keen wit with which the Athenians, above all others, were endowed. With reference to form and technique, it was natural enough that comedy should for the most part be modeled after the outlines marked out by writers of tragedy, which already existed in a highly developed form. From tragedy, too, comedy largely drew its material for parodies.

The unfortunate result of the Peloponnesian War, which broke the fresh, self-conscious vigor of Athens, forms a turning-point in the history of Attic comedy. With eager participation of the people in public affairs, died out also their interest in them; other and narrower interests—above all, material interests began to engross their attention. They had been wont to spare neither pains nor expense in organizing, equipping and training a chorus as an essential feature of every play. But now, while they still continued for a time to furnish the chorus, they no longer felt the old pride in providing it with an elaborate outfit, or in training it when equipped; and their growing indifference ultimately resulted in its being given up altogether. In fact the Plutus of Aristophanes, the latest of the eleven plays of that author which have been preserved to us, shows that a decided change in this respect has already taken place. In lieu of choral parts having an organic connection with the play, is found between the acts a song, borrowed from some other source.

The Later Greek Comedy.

The new Attic comedy, which does not appear fully developed till the latter part of the fourth century, is almost wholly severed from all connection with public life and shows, in comparison with the old comedy, a lack of variety in the subjects treated, a decline in powers of invention, and lack of the old boldness in handling materials. We have, however, some compensation for this loss. As a result of continual painstaking practice, there is greater smoothness, a more artistic finish in language and action, a treatment showing closer attention to detail, and a more polished technique. Comedy now is a tame society play, dealing merely with the manners and customs of family life. Even the materials that chance to be borrowed from other sources, e.g. from mythology, are treated in like manner. The abuses practiced in public life no longer receive notice even by so much as an allusion. At the same time personal attacks upon individuals have ceased; only typical characters, such as bragging soldiers, sponging parasites, and insolent sycophants, are held up to ridicule. As compensation for this narrower range of subjects, appears invention of new situations and of amusing complications out of which the same ever-recurring characters have to extricate themselves. In this respect the fruitful, untiring genius of the poets of the new comedy challenges our admiration, though our estimate of them is based upon mere fragments from their plays and upon Latin plays that are modeled after them.

With reference to dramatic arrangement and technique, the new comedy as well as the old is modeled after tragedy, and especially after the tragedy of Euripides. It is characterized by the same moralizing tone prevalent in the works of that author. The numerous maxims, however, which lend this color are, in the new comedy, brought into the play only incidentally, while in the old Attic comedy, with its vigorous assaults upon everything that was blameworthy, they seemed an organic part of the play itself.

Among the poets of the new Attic comedy, of whom there were more than sixty, the most distinguished in the judgment of antiquity was Menander (342-290 B.C.). Next to him, Philemon, Diphilus, Philippides, Posidippus, and Apollodorus of Carystus, are to be named as the favorite writers of comedy. Of the original productions of these poets only a few fragments have come down to us. We have, however, Latin adaptations from some of their plays in the two great comic poets of Rome, Plautus and Terence.

Of course the transition from the old to the new comedy was a gradual one. It extended over a period of fifty years, from the Plutus of Aristophanes (presented first in 408 and again, this time in a revised form and without chorus and parabasis, in 388) to about the time of the Macedonian sovereignty (338). The best known poets of this period are Antiphanes and Alexis. Whether we should look upon this so-called middle comedy as forming a distinct type by itself may be questioned; but at any rate the division into the old and the new is an important one, and each of these two classes is marked by well-defined characteristics.

The new comedy, in its development, coincides with the political decline of Greece and with the gradual decay of her art. As compared with the old comedy, it shows in many respects unmistakable retrogression. As a natural result, however, of the conditions already indicated, it is free from that distinctly local coloring, which makes even a play of Aristophanes often unintelligible to one who is not familiar with the condition of affairs in Athens at the time the play was written; it has the cosmopolitan character, which becomes, during the fourth and third centuries before Christ, more and more peculiar to Greek life. It was owing to this peculiar cosmopolitan character that the new comedy, about the middle of the third century before Christ, found a welcome in Rome—a city highly developed politically, but as yet without a literature. That the comic poets of Rome chose the material for their translations and adaptations exclusively from the new (and the so-called middle) comedy, is not then due wholly to the fact that that kind of writing was still flourishing when Roman literature began.

Roman Comedy.

The ancient Romans, like the Italians of to-day, had, as one of their notable characteristics, a fondness for the dramatic, and especially for the comic. Vergil, in Georg. II. 385–396 (cf. Hor. Ep. II. 1, 139 ff.), pictures the gaieties of rural festivals, at which improvised jests, in rude verse, were exchanged in animated dialogue. These versus Fescennini, as they are commonly called (after the town of Fescennia), had no literary importance; but still we see in them germs similar to those from which the Greeks developed their artistic comedy. It is interesting also to note that a process of development seems to have set in on Roman, much as it did on Greek, soil. As a demand was felt for something less rude than these versus Fescennini, a form of representation arose for which preparation was made beforehand and less was entrusted to improvisation. To add to the interest of the entertainment, the verses were now accompanied by music and dancing, and the whole performance in this improved form took the name of Satura. These performances, if we may accept the common view regarding the meaning of the term saturae,¹ seem to have been devoid of any connected plot, but they demanded a certain amount of care and skill on the part of the performers, and accordingly a class of people began to devote special attention to acting as a profession. We must of course look upon these saturae (of which the contents were of a purely local character, and the structure even yet not artistic) as entirely different from the Greek comedies as far as their contents and their structure were concerned. A nearer approach to dramatic form was made in the fabulae Atellanae, so-called because they are said to have originated in the Campanian town of Atella. The fabulae Atellanae were broad farces in which figured stock characters analogous to the clown, pantaloon and harlequin of a modern pantomime. Rude as all these performances were, they nevertheless awakened in the Roman public an interest in dramatic representations. Under favorable circumstances they might have developed into an artistic drama that would have been truly Roman in thought and feeling.

But there now appeared on the scene an influence that was destined to dominate the whole course of Roman literature. After the war with Pyrrhus, the Romans came into closer contact with the Greek cities of southern Italy and Sicily, and had their attention called to the creations of Greek genius. They never recovered from the spell that was thus cast about them. Instead of attempting to create a literature of their own along independent lines, they now devoted themselves chiefly to copying the masterpieces of Greece. The first fruits of this new influence were seen in mere translations and adaptations from the Greek. The comedies that were thus translated, or adapted, are called fabulae palliatae, from the Greek cloak (pallium) worn by the actors, to distinguish them from the fabulae togatae in which Roman manners were represented. The first writer to be mentioned in this connection is Livius Andronicus, who was born at Tarentum about 284 B.C. After the capture of his native city in 272 B.C., he became the slave of M. Livius Salinator, who, charmed by the talents of the young man, soon afterwards gave him his freedom. In 240 Livius was engaged to produce, as one of the attractions of the ludi Romani, two Latin plays, a tragedy and a comedy, adapted from Greek originals. Such dramatic entertainments had for a long time been regularly given in the original Greek in the towns of southern Italy and so were more or less familiar to the Romans. These performances found such favor at Rome that from this time on they became a regular part of the games. Livius Andronicus must then be looked upon as having introduced a new era for the Roman people. In Livy the historian (7, 2), the existence of a connected plot and the systematic arrangement of the contents are designated as the features that distinguished the new drama from the old satira. It was further distinguished by the employment of Greek metres and by differences in the form of representation. Only a few fragments of the plays of Livius have come down to us. We know, however, that he was held in so great esteem at Rome that, in honor of him, the temple of Minerva on the Aventine was appropriated to the use of scribae et histriones, who organized themselves into a sort of poets' guild.

Another writer, likewise active in both tragedy and comedy, was Cn. Naevius, a native of Campania, born about 265 B.C. Being a Latin by descent, he took part in the First Punic War, a conflict which he afterward described in Saturnian verse. After 235 B.C., we find him noted at Rome as a fiery and popular poet, especially in the field of comedy. Fragments of thirty of his comedies have come down to us. The violent attacks which he made on the highest families of Rome led to his imprisonment and later to his banishment. He died in exile in 201 B.C., or, according to some authorities, a little later.

T. Maccius Plautus was a writer of comedies only. He was born at Sarsina in Umbria, about 254 B.C. On coming to Rome, he found employment at the hands of certain theatrical managers. What he saved from his earnings here he subsequently lost in foreign speculation, after which he returned penniless to Rome and was compelled to earn his bread at hard labor in a mill, a duty generally reserved for the lowest slaves. His employment in the theatre, however, had interested him in the stage, and he resolved to turn to account the knowledge this experience had given him. He accordingly found time, even amid the unfavorable conditions surrounding him, to write comedies, and in a short time he became the most popular of comic poets. His death came in 184 B.C., but the popularity of his plays remained undiminished; and when, after the middle of the second century B.C., it became customary, instead of presenting new plays, to bring the old again and again upon the stage (see p. xxv), the comedies of Plautus long continued to be among the chief attractions of the theatre. So great indeed was his popularity that plays of other writers were frequently given out under his name, to create a prejudice in their favor. One hundred and thirty plays were at one time ascribed to him. Of these Varro pronounced twenty-one as certainly genuine, nineteen others as probably so. All but one¹ of these twenty-one genuine plays have come down to us, although some are in a more or less fragmentary condition. The Ambrosian palimpsest of Plautus (of the fifth century) originally contained also the lost play, as three leaves of this Ms. still bear witness.

We hear of a certain M. Plautius, belonging to about the same period, who was also a writer of comedies, but we know nothing very definite about him. The similarity between his name and that of Plautus may easily have brought it about that his plays were ascribed to the better known poet.

Q. Ennius is chiefly noted for his epic poem called Annales—in which he relates, in eighteen books, the entire history of Rome from the earliest times down to his own—for his saturae, and his tragedies. But he also attempted comedy, and so deserves mention here. He was born at Rudiae in Calabria in 239 B.C. He was brought to Rome from Sardinia in 204 by the quaestor M. Porcius Cato, and here he seems to have lived in moderate circumstances as teacher of Greek and as stage poet. In 184 B.C. he received the right of Roman citizenship which he lived to enjoy for fifteen years. None of his comedies have come down to us—not even in fragments of any importance.

The next poet worthy of mention in this connection is Staius Caecilius, who enjoyed an enviable reputation among the ancients as a writer of palliatae, and who was an important forerunner of Terence. An Insubrian by birth, he came to Rome about 194 B.C., probably as a captive taken in war. Later, however, he was given his freedom. His first attempt at comedy failed and was not even heard to the end by the impatient audience; but he toiled on till he won literary fame and a name among comic poets second only, as yet, to that of Plautus. He died soon after Ennius, with whom in life he had been on the most intimate terms.

We now come to a poet who calls for a more extended notice, one whose name is always coupled with that of Plautus as one of the two greatest names in Roman comedy,—Publius Terentius Afer. He was a native of Carthage. His surname, Afer, however, makes it probable that he was not of Phoenician blood, but that his parents belonged to one of the African tribes subject to the Carthaginians.¹ The date of his birth was about 190 B.C.² At an early age, he came to Rome as a slave of the senator Terentius Lucanus, though how this fact should be explained is a disputed question. He can hardly have been taken captive in war, as he was born after the end of the Second Punic War and died before the beginning of the next war with Carthage. Possibly he was carried off by enemies of his native city, in early youth, and later brought to Rome. Be this as it may, his master, struck by the talent and the prepossessing appearance of the boy, not only caused him to be carefully educated, but also gave him his freedom. The associations to which he had been accustomed in the house of his master

¹ For the meaning of Afer, see Em. Baehrens (N. Jahrb. f. Phil. 1881, p. 401 f.). His attempts, however, to show that this is inconsistent with the tradition that Terence was born at Carthage, is far from convincing. There must have been many enslaved Afri (Greek Αἰβυες) in Carthage, and if we suppose Terence to have been the son of one of these, to have been brought to Rome and to have been named, as was customary in the case of slaves, after the nation to which he belonged, he would naturally have been called Afer (not Poenulus, even though born at Carthage). For parallel instances in the case of soldiers of imperial times, cf. Th. Mommsen, Herm. XIX. 29 ff., especially p. 35 f.

² The date generally given is 185 B.C., in accordance with Suetonius in his vita Terenti, p. 32 (ed. Ritschl in Reifferscheid, Suet. p. 26 ff. and 481 ff. = Opusc. III, 204 ff.). But H. Sauppe (Nachr. d. Gött. Ges. 1870, p. 111 ff.) has made this seem very improbable. The year of Terence's birth, like that of many other famous men of antiquity, was not definitely known even to the scholars of ancient Rome. In attempting to establish the date they acted on the supposition that Terence was of the same age as P. Scipio Africanus the younger. But we know that Terence brought out his first piece, the Andria, as early as 166 B.C., in view of which fact we are, Sauppe thinks, forced to conclude that he must have been several years older than Scipio. Otherwise the Andria must have been produced when the author was only nineteen years of age, and such a production would have required several years of careful preparation. But it bears every evidence of being the work of mature years. To be sure, Terence does not deny the taunt of his opponent (Heaut. Prol. vs. 23), Repente ad studium hunc (Terentium) se applicasse musicum.

made it easy for him to keep up his connections with the nobility of Rome. The same traits of character which had procured for him his freedom assured him the favor of the sons of the highest families; for one must remember that at that time in Rome it was for the most part the patricians, who, in art and literature as well as in politics, looked beyond the narrow boundaries of fatherland and felt a lively interest in a broader and higher intellectual culture. Among the friends of Terence who were members of the nobility, ancient authorities name Scipio Africanus the younger, C. Laelius, and L. Furius Philus. From the first he seems to have held himself entirely aloof from the narrower circle of the poets of Rome, who, as has already been pointed out (p. xv), had formed themselves into a guild. This at any rate is the simplest explanation of the story that the aged poet Caecilius, to whose approval Terence was obliged to submit his first play, the Andria, before the aediles would allow it to be produced at the games, knew nothing at all of the young poet. The passage already cited from Heaut. Prol. vs. 23 f. harmonizes with this supposition:

Amicum ingenio fretum, haud natura sua.*

The open jealousy and hatred felt toward Terence by other poets arose largely from his disinclination to affiliate with them. Content with the applause which he won from the ranks of the nobility, he cared little for the approval of others.

It was believed by many in antiquity that the distinguished

But from this we are to infer merely that he had not made himself known among the poets of Rome long before his first appearance with a drama. Indeed, the statement that he had suddenly, i.e. unexpectedly, adopted the poet's calling, seems more naturally used of a man who, in his earlier years, had not followed such pursuits, or at least had not let it be known that he did. Lastly, the poet is not, in any of his prologues, obliged to defend himself against the charge of extreme youth; on the contrary, he himself (Heaut. Prol. vs. 51) scornfully speaks of his opponents among the spectators as adulescentuli.

friends of Terence, above referred to, aided him in his literary work, and even that large parts of his dramas were written by them. This report originated with those who were jealous of Terence's success, and it probably gained credence from the non-committal words of the poet when referring to that report. It can hardly be doubted that Terence actually did receive much encouragement in various ways from his noble friends and even profited at times by their advice, but further than this there is no good reason to suppose that he was dependent upon them. His language, to be sure, is that of the highest and most cultured society of his time, but this is to be looked upon as a result of his constant intercourse with that society, and need not cast any suspicion upon the authenticity of his plays.

The literary tendency of the times, as well as his own inclination, led the poet to devote his activity to the fabula palliata, although the period of its decline was now near at hand. Terence produced his first comedy, the Andria, at the ludi Megalenses, in April, 166 B.C. The aediles, who had charge of the games, had some misgivings about allowing the presentation of a play by an entirely unknown poet. He was accordingly induced to submit his play first to the older poet Caecilius, for approval. Regarding the meeting between these two poets, the following story is told. Terence found Caecilius at dinner, and, as the caller was meanly dressed, he was given a seat on a bench near the couch on which the great author was reclining, and was then given permission to read what he had written. After the first few verses had been read, Caecilius was so captivated by the young man's talents that he invited him to a place beside him upon the couch. He then listened attentively and with unbounded admiration to the remainder of the play.¹

The order of presentation of the plays of Terence, during the lifetime of the poet, may be seen from the following table :

Hecyra ¹	“ “ “	165 “
Heauton timorumenos . . .	“ “ “	163 “

Four of these are translations from Menander; two (Hecyra and Phormio), from Apollodorus of Carystus, who flourished between 300 and 260 B.C.

It is not to be wondered at that the earliest writers, in adapting the productions of foreign genius to Roman ears, should give them something of a native character, and we accordingly error, or whether the first production of the Andria, in spite of the praise accorded it by Caecilius, was postponed for several years. Dziatzko agrees with Ritschl in the supposition that, in Hieronymus' words: mortuus est (Caecilius) anno post mortem Ennii et iuxta Ianiculum . . ., a numeral has fallen out after Ennii, and that it should read anno . . . III (tertio), or, as Dziatzko thinks more probable, IIII or IV (quarto).

² Second unsuccessful presentation.

⁴ Third and successful presentation.

find that all the plays of Plautus bear Latin titles (Asinaria, Aulularia, Captivi, etc.), except in plays like the Amphitruo and the Epidicus, where the title is taken from the Greek name of a person in the play. The plays of Plautus, too, abound in Roman allusions, although the general coloring, even in Plautus, is of course distinctly Greek. Later, however, as the influence of Greek culture came to be more widespread, there was an ever-increasing tendency to make the Latin plays more nearly like the Greek from which the plots were taken. Indeed, the contemporaries of Terence, among them his chief adversary, Luscius Lanuvinus, made it a point of attack that he departed so far from his Greek original, as to weave into the general plot of his drama such scenes from other Greek comedies as particularly struck his fancy. This was done in the case of the Andria, the Adelphoe, and the Eunuchus; perhaps also in the Hecyra (Rh. Mus. XXI. 80 f.). This process of combining parts of different plays into one was maliciously called contaminatio. Except in this one respect, Terence has followed his Greek originals very closely, and the Roman allusions, which are so common in Plautus, are almost entirely wanting in Terence. The taunts of his enemies regarding his habit of combining parts of two plays into one had no effect upon him, except that he was led repeatedly to justify the practice in the prologues of his plays (cf. Andr. Prol. 13-21, Heaut. Prol. 16-21, Ad. Prol. 1-14, Eun. Prol. 31-33).

of respect for the product of another's genius is noteworthy as showing that a play, of which a translation, or an adaptation, had been made by a Latin poet, was thenceforth looked upon as his own property. Terence as a rule respected this principle. In several cases, where his enemies accuse him of theft (furtum), he proves his production to be entirely "new" (cf. Ad. Prol. 6-14), or excuses himself on the plea of ignorance of any previous use of it. But it may be doubted, from his words in Eun. Prol. 27 (Si id est peccatum, etc.) and 35 ff., whether he looked upon the use of a Greek drama, or a part of one, by several Latin poets, as a very serious offense.

All six plays of Terence met with great applause from the public, though the Hecyra was not received with favor until the third attempt to present it. The greater attraction, formed by other amusements at the time of the first and second attempts to present this piece, made it impossible to act any of it the first time, and only one act of it at the second attempt (cf. Phor. Prol. 31 ff.; Hec. Prol. I. and II.). The Eunuchus, on the other hand, met with such success that its production was repeated (probably on the same day), and the poet received therefor the unusually large sum of eight thousand sesterces (about three hundred and thirty dollars).

After the third production of the Hecyra, in 160 B.C., Terence left Rome for Greece, probably to acquire a more intimate knowledge of the life and customs of the people of that country. In the following year, 159 B.C., the poet died, while on the point of returning to Rome with translations which he had recently made of other comedies. He met his death either by shipwreck off the island of Leucas, or else, after losing his baggage and his manuscripts by such a mishap, died at Stymphalus in Arcadia. He left a daughter, who was afterward married to a Roman knight. His property at the time of his death probably consisted of twenty acres of land, though another account represents him as having been reduced to absolute poverty.

Regarding the personal appearance of Terence, Suetonius says: Fuisse dicitur mediocri statura, gracili corpore, colore fusco.

As a poet Terence is especially noted for the artistic finish and refinement of his productions. The plots of his plays are carefully thought out and cleverly managed, the poet at times departing from his Greek original, where he can by so doing better serve his artistic purpose. No less carefully studied is his portrayal of character and of the motives which prompt to action the persons with whom he is dealing. To be sure, for all that is essential and best he was indebted to his Greek originals, but he deserves homage for having successfully reproduced these merits in his own plays. Indeed, in some of the details, he has even ventured to make improvements upon his originals.¹ As to the language of Terence, it is at all times select and pure and may pass as the best example we have of the colloquial language as used by the more refined circles of Roman society. Cicero and Caesar, who must surely be looked upon as competent judges, accord him in this respect the highest praise. But the excellences above mentioned are such as depend chiefly upon thought and study and painstaking. On the other hand one cannot fail to notice in Terence, as compared with Plautus, a certain lack of vigor, of sparkling, spontaneous wit, of liveliness, of variety in his characters, and of power in depicting passion. Upon the absence of these characteristics, the enemies of Terence based their accusation that his plays were "tenui oratione et scriptura leui" (Phorm. Prol. 5); and even Caesar complains that the "lenia scripta" of Terence lack "uis comica." It was probably for this reason, too, that Volcacius Sedigitus (about the end of the second century B.C., author of a treatise de poetis), in naming the ten most noted writers of fabulae palliatae in the order of their merit, assigned Terence to the sixth place.

It is further to be noticed, that no development in the genius of the poet can be discovered in the course of his productions. This is, without doubt, due for the most part to the repression of the individuality of writers of palliatae in general, and especially at the time of Terence, but it is due in part also to the shortness of the period through which his entire literary activity lasted. At any rate, it is quite impossible for us to designate any one of his six plays as the immature work of his youth.

History of the Text.

After the death of Terence, the writing of fabulae palliatae almost ceased.¹ In the absence of new productions, the custom now began of presenting again upon the stage the plays of former poets. It was but natural that many changes should be made in these old plays to make them better suited to the altered conditions under which they were to be reproduced, though Terence has suffered but little in this respect as compared with Plautus.² The plays of Terence, during the first decades following the middle of the second century B.C., were repeatedly brought upon the stage. To this fact the didascaliae bear undisputed testimony (Rh. Mus. XX. 591; XXI. 64 ff.).

¹ In the prologue to the Casina of Plautus, which was written about 154 B.C., or soon thereafter, we find the following (vs. 9 f.):

Nam nunc nouae quae prodeunt comoediae, Multo sunt nequiores quam nummi noui.

Turpilius, the last important writer of palliatae, lived, to be sure, till 103 B.C., but he probably ceased writing at an early date (Ritschl, Parerga, p. 188, Rem.). Men like Fundanius (Hor. Sat. I. 10, 40 ff.), Vergilius Romanus (Plin. Epist. VI. 21), and M. Pomponius Bassulus (of the end of the first century A.D.) translated Greek comedies, but these productions were intended only for reading.

² There can be no doubt that the comedies of Plautus are preserved to us in the form which they received to fit them for reproduction long after the time of Plautus. With Terence the case is different. The fact that the prologues to his plays, though appropriate only for the particular occasion for which they were written, have come down to us unchanged, is a clear proof that, at the time when the comedies of

As early as the second half of the second century B.C., scholars began, in imitation and emulation of the Greek grammarians, to turn their attention to the study of fabulae palliatae. The texts of the comedians were brought together in suitable form for reading, special care being taken to preserve, as far as possible, different readings wherever such existed. Notes, too, on the history of the different plays were collected and arranged in a connected manner. Lastly, Roman scholars wrote various treatises on the scenic and linguistic peculiarities of the old comedians and on other topics of interest to the student of literature. Among these were L. Accius (the famous writer of tragedy), Porcius Licinus, Volcacius Sedigitus, L. Aelius Stilo, Aurelius Opilius, Q. Cosconius, Serv. Clodius, and above all M. Terentius Varro, whose works, distinguished as they were for their learning and practical wisdom, formed the chief source of information for the historians of literature. The material for these works was drawn from the actors' copies of the plays, so far as they could be procured, and from the records of magistrates regarding the productions of plays brought out under their supervision. Consideration for the convenience of the reader led to the practice of indicating at the beginning of each scene the characters who take part in that scene, and of dividing plays into acts (see pp. xxxii f.). Plays still continued to be presented on the stage, but they were more successful in the provincial towns than at Rome, where the givers of games, pandering to the altered tastes of the crowd, gave them scenic representations of a more stirring character.

The plays of Terence, who always continued to be extensively read in antiquity, at length became corrupt through glosses, interpolations, and errors in copying. As a perfect understanding of the text in all its details was impossible without aids, full com-

Terence began to be extensively copied, people had the will and the means to transmit them to posterity in their original form. Of the prologues of Plautus, on the contrary, not one that was written for any production of the play shows a form that was suitable only for the first production.

mentaries became very common early in imperial times, and these of course offered a good basis for revisions. Such commentaries were prepared by Probus (probably M. Valerius Probus, about the middle of the first century A.D.), Aemilius Asper, Arruntius Celsus (perhaps only to the Phormio), Helenius Acro, Euanthius, and the somewhat later Aelius Donatus (about the middle of the fourth century A.D.). We have a commentary, bearing the name of the last-mentioned scholar, to five of the plays (that to the Heaut. being lost). This is a confused compilation of extracts from different commentaries (at least two), which themselves contained valuable explanatory comments from older works of a similar nature.

In the first half of the second century A.D., a period characterized by great zeal in the study of the older Latin literature, metrical arguments to the plays of Terence (periochae), of twelve verses each, were composed by C. Sulpicius Appollinaris, a native of Carthage, the teacher of A. Gellius and of the emperor Pertinax. In the Mss. these arguments are prefixed to the text of the respective plays.

In the course of time, the text of the comedies of Terence had become so corrupt that the necessity was felt of a thorough and comprehensive revision of the text, and such a revision was undertaken by a certain Calliopius.¹ The name of this man is appended to all the known Mss. of Terence, with the single exception of the Bembinus. It will readily be seen that this circumstance renders the Bembinus of special im-

Ter.* (Göttingen, 1877), p. 21, the Calliopian recension dates from the end of the third, or the beginning of the fourth, century; according to Fr. Leo (Rh. Mus. XXXVIII. p. 331), from the third century, while some scholars differ from these views so far that they assign it to the seventh century. Dziatzko (Commentationes Wölffliniae, Leip. 1891) and Schlee (Scholia Terentiana, Leip. 1893) represent the latest views in assigning it to the fifth century.

Dramatic Entertainments, the Actors, the Stage, etc.

It should be noted that, for some time after Livius Andronicus, dramatic performances in Rome were given only at the ludi Romani or maximi (in September) under the supervision of the curule aediles. Somewhat later they formed a part likewise of the Megalesia (in April), given under the direction of the curule aediles, of the ludi plebei (in November), given by the plebeian aediles, and, after 211 or 212 B.C., of the ludi Apollinares (in July), given by the praetor urbanus. To the officials who conducted the games, a specified sum of money was furnished by the state, for the purpose of defraying the expense attending the occasion. In the course of time, as the games took on a more elaborate character, the sum donated by the state had to be increased repeatedly, and even then those who had them in charge frequently had to make liberal contributions from their own private means. Besides the games that were thus celebrated on behalf of the state, there were also others given on extraordinary occasions, viz. at ludi funebres (or funerales), in honor of celebrated men, those accompanying dedications and triumphs, and those given as votive offerings.

Down to 174 B.C. these dramatic performances took place near the temple of the deity chiefly concerned in the festivities.¹ Permanent theatres of stone, such as were later built on a scale of great grandeur, were as yet unknown. When a play was to be produced, a wooden stage was erected for the purpose and then torn down after the performance. This stage was ordinarily built near the foot of some hill, or slope, so that the rising ground might afford convenient seats for the spectators, while those in front would not obstruct the view of those in the rear. On such a slope the people assembled under the open sky. As no seats were provided for their accommodation, they usually sat, or reclined, upon the ground. The more fastidious sometimes had stools brought for them from their homes, although this was looked upon as a mark of effeminacy and was even forbidden. In 179 B.C., a stage of stone was erected near the temple of Apollo, but this was of small dimensions and was probably intended for use only at the ludi Apollinares. Five years later, arrangements were made, on the part of the state, for the building of a substantial, immovable stage,¹ but this, if it was actually built, seems soon to have disappeared. In 146 B.C., L. Mummius built a complete theatre, provided with rows of seats, but this was of wood, and was torn down after each performance. Finally, in 55 B.C., was dedicated the stone theatre of Cn. Pompeius, the first permanent theatre erected in Rome. It was capable of accommodating forty thousand spectators.

The dramatic performances usually took place between prandium (about twelve o'clock) and cena (after three o'clock), so that when we consider the other amusements that formed a part of the day's exercises, it seems hardly possible that more than one play could, as a rule, have been presented on any one day. Later, in Cicero's time, the custom of giving these performances in the early morning was introduced.

When the ludi scaenici were to be given, the fact was announced by a crier (praeco), that the people might assemble at the proper place. Immediately before the performance began, there was a tituli pronuntiatio, an announcement of the subject of the play; but sometimes the prologue itself conveyed to the audience their first information regarding the subject of the play and the name of the poet. The actors were slaves, or, in later times, freedmen, this profession being considered beneath the dignity of free-born men. The dominus, or general manager of the troupe was a freedman who also took part in the acting and was sometimes called the actor (i.e. par excellence). At first, poets were wont to bring out their plays themselves, hiring slaves and freedmen for the purpose, but this practice ceased at an early date, and, as early as Plautus, the poet himself was no longer actor also. The Stichus of Plautus, for instance, according to the didascalía, was brought out by T. Publilius Pellió,¹ who is severely criticised by the poet himself (Bacch. 214 f.) for the manner in which he put the Epidicus on the stage.

To these theatrical managers application was made by those who wished to give dramatic entertainments. The poets had business relations, for the most part, only with the actores, who bought, or rejected, their plays, and these actores accordingly were very influential in determining the fate and encouraging the development of poetic talent. In exceptional cases, however, the givers of the games, as they were men of experience in such matters and naturally felt great interest in the success of the performances, had a voice in the selection of the plays to be presented. All financial risk attending the presentation of a play had to be borne by the theatrical manager (the dominus). As it was of great importance to the givers of the games, that the people should be pleased with the amusements provided for them at such great expense, a reward was offered to the dominus, varying in amount according to the success of the play given by him.² This of course was calculated to secure the choice of the best possible play and to assure its presentation in the best possible manner. The dominus on his part was accustomed, after a successful performance, to reward the deserving actors of his company with a banquet. Cf. Plaut. Cist., end ; Rud. 1418 ff.

As regards the external equipment necessary for the dramatic performances, this was provided by contractors (conductores in Plaut. Asin. Prol. 3), under the supervision of the party who gave the games.¹

Among the Greeks, the number of actors allowed upon the stage at any one time was limited. This was not the case among the Romans, as there could be any number of actors which convenience might dictate. The dominus gregis did not, of course, care to increase the number unnecessarily, on account of the additional expense, preferring rather to produce a play with a few superior actors than with a larger number of indifferent ones. The Latin fabula palliata resembled the later period of the new Greek comedy in having no chorus. In exceptional cases, there seems to have been something similar to it, probably in imitation of the Greek original, e.g. the chorus of fishermen in Plaut. Rud. (vs. 290 ff.); but this was placed, not in the orchestra, but upon the stage. There is nothing of the kind, however, in Terence.

Female characters were, until comparatively late times (cf. Donatus on And. IV. 3, 1), impersonated by male actors in female dress. An exception to this rule must, however, be made in the case of the mimes (mimi), in which the female parts were really taken by women. It is needless to say that these women, like all the other actors in mimes, were in very bad repute.

The custom of using masks seems to have been introduced soon after Terence by the theatrical managers, Cincius Faliscus and Minucius Prothymus. Up to that time actors depended for their effects upon wigs and rouge.

The plot in the fabula palliata is invariably laid in a Greek town or colony, usually in Athens. When the action was supposed to be taking place in a town, the proscenium represented an open street in that town. The background was ordinarily formed by three private houses, corresponding to the three entrances to the royal palace as represented on the stage in Greek tragedy; in place of one of these was sometimes the front of a temple, when the character of the play made such a building necessary. Narrow alleys also opened from the back of the stage into the street (cf. Phorm. 891 f.). Upon the stage stood, according to Donatus, two altars—one on the right, dedicated to Liber, another on the left, dedicated to the deity chiefly concerned in the festivities of which the production of the play formed a part. On this point, however, there are differences of opinion.¹ On the right (from the point of view of the spectators) the street was supposed to lead to the forum and the interior of the town; on the left, to the harbor and foreign countries.

Division of Plays into Acts and Scenes.

A division of dramas into acts was already known in the time of Plautus and Terence, but it does not as a rule seem to have been clearly marked by the writers themselves. It was left rather to the discretion of the theatrical manager to introduce intermissions at suitable places in the play. This is perhaps the reason why the manuscripts, at least all the oldest of them, have no divisions into acts. Definite divisions were, however, established by the grammarians and the commentators of antiquity (though these sometimes differ among themselves), and five was settled upon as the proper number of acts for a drama (cf. Horace, A. P. 189 f.).

The division into scenes, on the other hand, is very old. It was customary to place before each scene a complete list of all the characters to appear in that particular scene. In the copies which formed the basis of our manuscripts, each character who had anything to say was denoted by a letter of the Greek alphabet, which letter served also in the text to designate that character. For the division into scenes, two principles seem to have been followed in our manuscripts. According to one of these, a new scene is formed by the exit or the entrance of a single actor, this being the principle followed, for the most part, in the Bembinus.¹ Exceptions to this rule are formed by cases in which a person leaves the stage only for a moment (cf. Phorm. 446), or in which the persons who remain behind have little to say, and that of no importance, until the entrance of another actor, or other actors, and the opening of a new scene (e.g. Phorm. 219, 778, 816). According to the other principle, a new scene is indicated only where the change of actors introduces an important turn in the plot. The manuscripts which follow this principle accordingly indicate no new scene at Phorm. 795, 884. The first of these two principles is followed in the present edition.

The Metres of Terence.

The metres found in Terence are, with rare exceptions, either iambic or trochaic. A peculiarity of an iambic or a trochaic verse is that it is, at least in Greek poetry, measured by dipodies, i.e. pairs of feet, instead of by single feet, each dipody having one main and one subordinate ictus. Accordingly, a verse of four feet is called a dimeter (instead of a tetrameter), one of six feet a trimeter (instead of a hexameter), etc. Frequently, however, and especially with reference to early Latin poetry, these verses are called quaternarii, senarii, etc., names given them solely with reference to the number of feet contained in each, the distinctions between the odd and the even feet having been, for the most part, lost sight of by early Latin poets. We may divide the verses of Terence into the following varieties :

¹ An exception is found, for example, in Phorm. 441, where it indicates no new scene.

Iambic :

In all iambic verses, any one of the following feet is allowed as a substitute for the pure iambus, $\cup \angle$: (a) anapaest, $\cup \angle$; (b) spondee, $> \angle$; (c) tribrach, $\cup \cup \cup$; (d) dactyl, $> \cup \cup$; (e) proceleusmatic, $\cup \cup \cup$. It should be noticed, however, that the last foot of an acatalectic verse is invariably a pure iambus (with the privilege, of course, of the syllaba anceps), and that a proceleusmatic is never used by Terence in the fifth foot.¹

1. Iambic Senarius (Trimeter Acatalectic).—This verse, patterned after the Greek trimeter, constitutes fully half of each play of Terence.

The caesuras may be classified as follows, in the order of their frequency: (a) the so-called penthemimeral, after the arsis of the third foot, e.g. $\cup _ \cup _ \cup \parallel _ \cup _ \cup _ \cup _$; (b) the hepthemimeral, after the arsis of the fourth foot, e.g. $\cup _ \cup _ \cup _ \cup \parallel _ \cup _ \cup _$, in which case there is often diaeresis after, or a secondary caesura in, the second foot. Not many verses are without one of these caesuras.

In connection with this verse, the following peculiarities call for notice: (1) An anapaest is not allowed immediately after a dactyl; (2) When a proceleusmatic is used, its ictus-syllable nearly always begins a word, and the ictus and word-accent, with rare exceptions, coincide. The proceleusmatic is most common at the beginning of a verse.

2. Iambic Octonarius (Tetrameter Acatalectic).—The caesura of this verse falls into two classes: (a) It may be after the fifth arsis, i.e. $\cup _ \cup _ \cup _ \cup _ \parallel _ \cup _ \cup _ \cup _$; (b) it may be at the end of the fourth foot, e.g. $\cup _ \cup _ \cup _ \cup _ \parallel \cup _ \cup _ \cup _ \cup _$, in which case the fourth foot is treated like the final foot of the verse, i.e. it must be a pure iambus, hiatus is sometimes allowed after it (at least in Plautus), and certain forms, otherwise used in iambic metres only at the end of a verse (e.g. siet, the infinitive in -ier, etc.), are also used here.

¹ Dziatzko claims that it is allowed in the fifth foot; but see Appendix on vs. 598.

3. Iambic Septenarius (Tetrameter Catalectic), called septenarius because only seven feet are complete, though it really contains seven and a half feet. The caesura is (a) usually after the fourth foot, which then presents the same peculiarities of treatment as in the octonarius under similar conditions; (b) sometimes after the arsis of the fifth foot.

4. Iambic Quaternarius (Dimeter Acatalectic), rare in Terence, occurring only three times in the Phormio (vss. 163, 183, 196). This verse is usually employed as a clausula (see p. xxxvi) in connection with octonarii and septenarii. Here the proceleusmatic is not found in Terence.

Trochaic :

Any one of the substitutes allowed in iambic verses for the pure iambus may, except as indicated below, also stand here for the pure trochee, $\angle \cup$, the metrical accent being, however, in all cases, upon the first syllable of the foot. The proceleusmatic is found in Plautus, though not in Terence, as a substitute for a trochee.

1. Trochaic Octonarius (Tetrameter Acatalectic).— This verse is used only in lyric parts of the plays, in connection with other verses, to form special rhythmic systems. In Terence trochaic octonarii are always followed by trochaic septenarii.

The caesura is (a) usually after the fourth foot, from which foot the dactyl is then excluded; (b) sometimes in the fourth or fifth foot. In this verse a tribrach, a spondee, or an anapaest is allowed even in the eighth foot.

2. Trochaic Septenarius (Tetrameter Catalectic), called septenarius because only seven feet are complete, though it really contains seven and a half feet. This verse in Terence is, in point of frequency, next to the iambic senarius. The caesura may be (a) after the fourth trochee, in place of which a dactyl is not then admissible, or (b) after the fifth arsis, generally with a minor caesura after the fourth thesis or the third arsis. In this verse, as in iambic verse, an anapaest is not used immediately after a dactyl. The seventh foot is commonly kept pure, though a tribrach or a dactyl is occasionally found. The last syllable of the verse may, as usual, be either long or short.

3. Trochaic Ternarius (Dimeter Catalectic) occurs in the Phormio only in vss. 191 and 729.

Besides the verses above referred to, Bacchic and Cretic Tetrameters are met with in the Andria of Terence.

Among the longer verses in lyric parts, and at the end of stichic series (And. 605, Hec. 621, 731), is sometimes thrown in a single, shorter verse called a clausula. A clausula always has the same rhythm as the preceding verse (e.g. Phorm. 163, 183, 191, where it follows iambic quaternarii, and 729, where it follows a trochaic quaternarius). Metrically, clausulae are handled like the complete verses of the same rhythm.—Single words of address, or of exclamation, occasionally stand at the beginning of a lyric part (Phorm. 485).

It will be seen from what has been said that the Roman dramatists—for this is true not merely of the fabula palliata alone—could avoid monotony in their plays by varying the form of their verse to correspond at each point with the character of the scene.

Adaptability of the Various Metres to Different Moods.

All the plays of Terence open with iambic senarii. This is the verse of ordinary narrative, or dialogue, sometimes also of soliloquy, and seems the one best adapted for making the audience acquainted with the general situation. Its movement may be illustrated by the following lines:

The tempest nears us ; darkly rolls the angry sea ;
The thunder mutters ; lightnings leap from cloud to cloud."

As the plot develops, the metre changes to suit the varying moods of the characters. Iambic octonarii are suited to an animated, impassioned mood. Compare:

"And furious every charger neighed, to join the dreadful revelry."

Trochaic septenarii are suited to a somewhat more quiet, peaceful frame of mind. Compare :

“Tell me not in mournful numbers, life is but an empty dream.”

Iambic septenarii, which in Latin occur only in comic poets, are found chiefly in serio-comic strains. Compare :

“A captain bold of Halifax, who lived in country quarters.”

Trochaic octonarii are peculiar to those parts of a scene that are intended to be sung. The movement of this verse may be illustrated by the following :

“Beams of noon, like burning lances, through the tree-tops flash and glisten.”

It will be understood, of course, that most of these metres are sometimes used where the above-mentioned characteristics are not prominent. The moods indicated are, in each case, to be regarded merely as those most frequently associated with the verse.

Differences in the Manner of Rendering Various Rhythms ; Musical Accompaniment, etc.

A change in the character of the verse was often accompanied also by a corresponding change in the manner of presenting the scene. With reference to the differences in the manner of presentation, the various parts of a play are to be divided into three distinct classes :

(1) those composed of ordinary narrative, or dialogue, written in iambic senarii, without musical accompaniment ;

(2) those merely recited in a melodramatic manner to the accompaniment of the flute, written in trochaic or iambic septenarii and in iambic octonarii ;

(3) those of a purely lyric nature sung to a set tune with flute accompaniment, written in varying metres [including those under (2)], but commonly characterized by the presence of trochaic octonarii.¹

In the text editions of antiquity, letters were added to the superscriptions of different scenes to indicate the manner in which they were to be rendered, and these marks are still distinguishable in some of the manuscripts of Plautus. These show that the last two kinds of scenes, (2) and (3) above, as they were both accompanied by music, were marked with the letter C., i.e. canticum, song; the first kind (1), with the letters DV., i.e. diuerbium, spoken dialogue. In the editions of Terence, as may be seen from Donatus, scenes of a purely lyric character were marked M.M.C. (perhaps an abbreviation for modi mutati cantici); those merely recited with musical accompaniment, simply C. (though this rests upon the opinion of Ritschl, Donatus giving us no information on this point); those consisting of ordinary dialogue, *DV.*²

It was customary to have music also before the beginning of the play (before the prologue) and between the acts. The music for the plays of Plautus and Terence seems to have been composed entirely by slaves, — that for all the plays of Terence by Flaccus, the slave of Claudius. The music was given by a single flute-player (tibicen), probably by the composer himself, with a double flute, or, perhaps we might say, clarinet, as the instrument bore a greater resemblance to it than to our flute. It was played by blowing into both tubes at the same time. From the didascalie we learn of four different kinds of these instruments :

tibiae pares in which the two pipes were of equal length ;

tibiae impares in which they were of unequal length ;

² Indications of this system of marking are preserved in the Phormio before Act. II., Sc. 4 ; see Rh. Mus. XXIX. 54.

tibiae serranae of which but little is known, though they were probably of equal length¹; and duae dextrae tibiae in which the two tubes were of equal length and identical in key and note.

Regarding the last-mentioned tibiae, we are told by Varro that the right tube was for leading (tibia incentiua), the left for accompanying (tibia succentiua). We have no further knowledge regarding the difference between the various kinds of these instruments; but we may be certain that the choice of instrument depended upon the character of the play. In the case of the Heauton timorumenos, we know from the didascalía that instruments were changed in the course of the play itself.

An important difference between the practices of the ancient and of the modern stage may be inferred from Livy, 7, 2, 8 ff. It is here recorded that, from the time of Livius Andronicus throughout the whole period when Roman comedy was at its height, the lyrical parts were sung by a person especially selected for the purpose and stationed near the flute-player, while the actors meanwhile were wont merely to act silently, in a manner suitable to the words thus sung.

PROSODY.

The prosody and the language of Terence differ far less from those of the later, classical authors, than do those of Plautus, though there were only a few years between the two writers. Peculiarities of this nature will be pointed out in detail in the notes. The more important of these, however, may well find a place in this introduction.²

² A number of special forms and certain peculiarities in the metrical treatment of some forms, are found only at the close of verses, or half verses with an iambic ending: the full forms of the perfect in -auer-, euer-, ouer-, iuer-; the subjunctive siem, etc., and its com-

1. Vowels.

The final syllables of words in archaic Latin present a long list of vowels long by nature, which were afterward shortened. This was especially the case in Ennius and Plautus. From Terence may be cited stetūt (Phorm. 9), rugeāt (Ad. 25).

2. Consonants.

In the earliest Latin, no such thing was known as the doubling of consonants in writing. The distinctness with which certain syllables were pronounced was constantly varying. Ennius was the first to introduce the doubling of consonants in writing¹ and thus to put an end to the wavering and uncertainty of the prosody in such cases, though the rules he established did not, nor could it be expected that they would, come at once into general favor. Terence is already under the influence of Ennius in this respect, but the former habits sometimes assert themselves even in him, e.g. ille, esse, eccum quippe, immo, etc.

It will further be noticed that, in early Latin, the addition of l, or r, to a mute does not ordinarily make a long syllable, e.g. pātrēm. In the pronunciation of every-day life, there was a tendency (clearly shown in the inscriptions) to slur over certain consonants, especially when these were at the end of a word. The same tendency is seen in early poetry, certain final consonants being sometimes disregarded to suit the requirements of prosody. In the case of m before a following pounds; the present passive infinitive in -ier; the long quantity of the first syllable in fieri, fierem, etc.; dissyllabic nihil; short vowels in cases like emērant (Eun. 20); the forms duint, perduint; neglect of syncope in the declension of dexter and sinister; the forms face, coeperet (Ad. 397), creduas (Phorm. 993), attigas (And. 789), mauolo (Hec. 540), compluria (Phorm. 611).

¹ Hinnad occurs in an inscription of 211 B.C. (C, I, L. I, 530), but this is in mere imitation of the Greek Ἔννα. See Lindsay, Latin Language (1894), p. 8.

vowel or before h, this practice continued to be general even in classical times. The same was true, for a long time, of final s after a short vowel; it could, as late as the boyhood of Cicero, be disregarded before consonants in the arsis (even of the last foot), or in the unaccented syllable of a resolved thesis, e.g. ex omnībŭ(s) rēbus. Nempe, unde, and inde sometimes have the value of only two morae (instead of three, as one might expect), e.g. Phorm. 307 and 681. This has commonly been explained as due to a shortening of the first syllable, nēmpĕ; but Skutsch (Forsch. zur Lat. Grammatik u. Metrik) makes it seem plausible that the pronunciation of these words in such cases was rather nēmp, ūnd, īnd.

3. Influence of Verse-Accent and Word-Accent.

The most important and far-reaching peculiarity of prosody to be noted in the dramatic poets is the frequent shortening of a long syllable when it is immediately preceded by a short syllable and immediately preceded, or followed, by the verse-ictus. The influence of this "iambic law" (so called because it concerns the combination $\cup \text{—}$) may, then, change

- (1) $\cup \text{—} \text{—}$ to $\cup \cup \text{—}$, e.g. Phorm. 113 ēnīm sē to ēnīm sē;
 (2) $\cup \text{—} \text{—}$ to $\cup \cup \text{—}$, e.g. Phorm. 739 cōnlōquar quīs hīc lō- quitur to cōnlōquār quīs hīc
lōquitur;
 (3) $\text{—} \text{—}$ to $\text{—} \cup$, e.g. Phorm. 209 quīd hīc conterimus to quīd hīc conterimus;

It is important to note, however, that in such cases the long syllable may be shortened only when the short syllable immediately preceding begins a word. The shortening, furthermore, seems to take place only in the following cases:

- (1) In a dissyllabic iambic word¹;

(2) In a monosyllabic word (or one that has become such by elision) preceded by a short monosyllable (or a word which has become such by elision);

(3) In the first syllable of a word of two or more syllables preceded by a short monosyllable (or a word that has become such by elision);

(4) In the second syllable of a polysyllabic word beginning with a short syllable.

In the cases under (3) and (4), the rule holds only for syllables "long by position," but having a short vowel.

Another effect of the metrical accent is frequently seen in cases where monosyllabic words ending in a long vowel, or in m, instead of being elided before a following vowel, or h, receive the ictus and are treated as short syllables (e.g. Phorm. 27 quí aget; 419 ně agas; 808 (?) quám ego).

4. Synizesis and Hiatus.

Two vowels coming together within a word, but not forming a diphthong, regularly remain separate in verse, just as in ordinary speech. Such vowels are, however, blended together (synaloepha, or synizesis) when they belong to originally distinct words (e.g. Phorm. 4 antéhac; 668 próinde), unless the final vowel of the first word is long and has the ictus, when, in accordance with the rule just given above, it is retained in a short form (e.g. Phorm. 425 próhibebo). Synizesis may occur also in words like āin (= aisne), āibam, dēus, mēus, ēum, fūisse, cūūs, hūūs, dūtius, dūās, nesciō, rēcere, dēhortatus, quōād, dūō, etc. In many cases, however, it is impossible to decide whether there is synizesis, or a shortening of the final syllable of an iambic word. In words of which the language has both a full and a contracted form (e.g. nihil and nil, prehendo and prendo etc.) the manuscripts of Terence have, almost without exception, the full form, even where the metre requires the short form.

Hiatus is allowed within a verse only in the following cases: (1) in the caesura of iambic septenarii and octonarii (cf. pp. xxxiv and xxxv); (2) after interjections (Phorm. 411, 754, 803), in which case these are shortened, if they are long by nature and come in the arsis; (3) when there is a change of speakers, in which case there is, for the most part, a caesura (cf. Phorm. 146, 542, 963); (4) in cases like quí aget, nē agas, quám ego.

LANGUAGE.

1. Vowels.

The vowels of the Latin language undergo certain changes, in the course of their development, with considerable regularity. In this respect, Terence frequently represents an earlier stage than the writers of the classical period. Thus, after u, o is regularly found, where another u was later used, as in seruos, tuos, antiquos, relinquont, metuont, (= seruus, tuus, antiquus, relinquunt, metuunt), etc. Such words were in fact commonly spelled -uos, -quos, -quont, -uont till well into the first century A.D.¹ Again u, as well as e, is found in the gerund and gerundive of the third and fourth conjugations, e.g. faciundus (faciendus); u for later i, in lubet and in superlatives, especially after t and s; e.g. optumus, pessumus; ei, for later i, e.g. deico for dico, although this ei has been generally changed in our Mss. to conform to the later spelling. Words formed with the suffix -culum appear in early Latin chiefly in a shorter form; e.g. periculum, saeclum, uinclum.

2. Consonants.

Quo- is regularly found in certain words, where the later period

uses cu-: quouis, quoi, quom, quor, etc. (= cuius, cui, etc.). The forms gnatus and gnata (when used as substantives), perhaps also gnauiter (Eun. 51), still retain their initial g.

Assimilation of consonants does not, as a rule, appear in the written form. This is particularly the case with in, except, apparently, in the very common words imperium, imperare,¹ impetrare. Ad is assimilated only before ce, cī (accedere, accidere, but *adcurrere*²), pe (appellere, but adportare, adprobare, etc.) and ti (attinere, attingere). On the whole, the process of assimilation seems to have gone further in the more common words than in those less frequently used. B in ab and ob before s and t has very commonly in the Mss. become p.

The Mss. show great wavering between d and t at the end of certain pronouns and particles (e.g. id, it, illud, illut, aliud, aliut, apud, aput), but this variation in spelling was, without doubt, common among the ancients themselves. In this edition the usual orthography has been followed, except where the Mss. are decisive for another. See note on vs. 159.

3. Peculiarities of Declension.

(1) Latinized form of Greek words; e.g. satrapa, lampada, Clinia (first declension), Aeschinus, etc.

(2) Genitive usually in -i, less commonly in -uis in words of the fourth declension, e.g. aduenti (Phorm. 154), anuis (Heaut. 287).

(3) Dative regularly in -u in words of the fourth declension.

(4) Dative (and perhaps the genitive) occasionally in ē, in words of the fifth declension.

(5) Genitive occasionally in -ī in those pronouns and adjectives which regularly have ius in that case, e.g. nulli consili (And. 608).

² Accusare forms an exception.

(6) The common use of the particle -ce in the genitive singular, and in the genitive, dative, accusative, and ablative plural of the pronoun hic, e.g. hisce, hasce. Terence commonly uses these forms with ce only before vowels and h.

Hisce is used in Eun. 269 as the masculine, and haec regularly as the feminine, form of the nominative plural.

(7) Ipsus sometimes for ipse, e.g. Phorm. 178.

4. Peculiarities of Conjugation.

(1) Active forms of verbs that were later used only, or chiefly, as deponent; e.g. luctare, altercare, conflictare (= contend with).

(2) The frequent use of -ibam, -ibo for -iebam, -iam in the singular of the imperfect and future of verbs of the fourth conjugation. Aio is the only verb in Terence which shows the shorter form also in the plural, e.g. And. 534, Phorm. 572.

(3) Syncopated forms (so-called¹) in the second person singular indicative, and more rarely in the infinitive of the perfect, when s or x precedes the -isti or -isse, e.g. sensti for sensisti, dixi for dixisti, iusse for iussisse, *produx*e for produxisse.

(4) The regular (probably invariable) use of -re instead of -ris in the second person singular passive of the tenses formed from the infinitive stem.

(5) The ending -ier, as well as -i, in the present passive infinitive, but only at the end of a verse, or a half-verse (before the caesura) which closes with an iambus. See p. xxxix, note 2.

(6) The use of siem, etc., for sim, etc., but only at the end of a verse, or a half-verse (before the caesura). See p. xxxix, note 2.

(7) The disappearance of the copula es, est, as an independent syllable, after an s preceded by a short vowel. Thus consciis es becomes consciū's, consciis est becomes consciust. Est is often blended with a preceding word also when that word ends in a vowel, or in m, e.g. ducendast iudicandumst.

THE PHORMIO.

The Phormio was first presented on the stage at the ludi Romani, in 161 B.C. It was modeled after the Epidicazomenos of Apollodorus, a play which took its name from the technical term ἐπιδικάζειν, "to adjudge (to some one) property under litigation," or, in the middle, "to lay claim to" (in the interest of one's self, or of some one else) with reference either to property itself, or to the hand of an heiress who inherits it. According to Athenian law, the nearest male relative of an orphaned girl was obliged either to marry her, or to furnish her with a marriage portion of 500 drachmae. It is upon this law that Phormio in our play rests his claim that Antipho must marry Phanium. Terence, contrary to his usual custom and to that of all writers of palliatae of his time, instead of retaining in this case the name of the Greek play, chose as the title of his Latin reproduction the name of the character to whom the term ἐπιδικαζόμενος would have been applicable, viz. Phormio. The reason for this was, without doubt, fear on the part of Terence that the Greek word, which called for an explanation to all not versed in Athenian law, would not be understood by the Roman public.

The action of the play turns upon the cunning artifice by which Phormio, the parasite of the young Antipho, makes it possible for this youth, in the absence of his father, to marry a poor orphan girl from Lemnos. Appealing to the law just referred to, he declares in court that Antipho and his father are the nearest relatives of the girl, and as Antipho does not deny it, he secures a decision of the court, directing that Antipho must marry her. The marriage accordingly takes place before the arrival of the father.¹ They are both supported by the slave Geta, whom Demipho, the father of Antipho, at his departure, has left in charge of his son, but who, as the slaves in Greek comedy usually do, humors his young master and seeks at all times to shield him, even at the risk of getting a drubbing himself, against the consequences of his misdeeds. They are also aided by Phaedria, the cousin of Antipho. Phaedria's father, Chremes, brother of Demipho, is also absent on a journey. In the mean time, Phaedria falls in love with a music girl, the slave of a procurer, but has not sufficient money to purchase her.

At this point the play opens, just as the two old gentlemen return from their journey. The marriage of Antipho, having already taken place before the opening of the play, the question now is: How is the news to be broken to the father, and how is he to be reconciled to what has taken place? Phaedria at the same time is reduced to straits by the action of the procurer, who, tired of waiting for Phaedria to purchase the music girl, proposes now to sell her to another, to be taken to foreign lands, unless the money be straightway forthcoming. This trouble of Phaedria is very effectively interwoven with the main thread of the play. Phormio, while in reality seeking to assure to Antipho the continued enjoyment of his present relations with Phanium, manages to procure from Demipho the money needed by Phaedria, on the pretext of wishing to bring about a dissolution of those relations.

The disentanglement of the complications is brought about, as is usually the case in fabulae palliatae, purely by external occurrences. It is no change of disposition on the part of

Demipho that brings about his reconciliation to the marriage, but this is effected rather by discovery of the identity of the objectionable girl with one whom all were ready to receive with open arms. Phanium, the young wife, is found to be the daughter of Chremes by a secret marriage, which he has entered into in Lemnos, under a fictitious name assumed for fear of discovery by his Athenian wife. She is thus found to be in reality, what the intriguers merely pretended she was before the court, i.e. one to whom Demipho and Antipho were next of kin. She is, in fact, the very person who had long been selected both by Demipho and Chremes as a wife for Antipho. By disclosure of the secret to Nausistrata, the Athenian wife of Chremes, Phormio, who had, by a happy chance, learned of the whole affair, is enabled at the end to secure to Phaedria also the possession of his sweetheart.

The play is characterized by a careful interweaving of the various parts, and the characters are clearly drawn and consistently maintained throughout. The two young men, in the nature of things, seem very much alike. On the contrary, the two old men are strongly individualized: Demipho is irritable, impetuous, determined; Chremes, irresolute, timid, submissive. Nausistrata is well aware of this difference and bestows upon Demipho, who, by the way, is a widower (see vs. 422 f.), respect as marked as is the contempt with which she treats her husband (vs. 719 ff., 784 ff., 1011 ff., 1031 ff.). The relation of Chremes to his wife is made all the more unfortunate for him by the fact that all the property belongs to her (cf. vs. 586 f., 680, 788 ff., 940).

To one feature of the play, critics may, perhaps, take exception. Why does not Phormio, after having sufficiently bantered the old men and compelled them, by threatening to tell Nausistrata of the secret marriage, to give up all claim to the money already paid him, — why does not Phormio content himself with this result? Why does he, by carrying out his threat, again set at stake what he has won? He must indeed have foreseen that he would not be able to carry out his plan without exposing the secret of Phaedria. The play might well have come to a rapid close after vs. 947, when all the complications had come to a happy termination. Still, it is quite in harmony with the bold, determined character of Phormio, that he improves the opportunity for the spirited scene which follows; and again the demands of justice, as it were, required that Chremes should be made to pay the penalty of his faithlessness and ill-becoming conduct. For Phaedria there was the prospect of winning his mother as an ally in his love-affair, and for Phormio that of becoming a permanent guest in the house of Chremes (cf. vs. 1050 ff.). Whatever may be said regarding this addition from an artistic point of view, it may at any rate be said that the play is thereby enriched by a very effective scene.

The Phormio, in addition to the excellences which mark the manner in which the plot is carried out and its portrayal of character, is distinguished also for its spirited and smoothly flowing language. It met with a decided success at its first presentation. The rôle of Phormio was, according to Donatus (Phorm. II. 2, 1), taken by the theatrical director, Ambivius, himself, to the entire satisfaction of the poet. It is probable from vs. 378 that Phormio is to be thought of as a young man.

The production of the Phormio was probably repeated at the ludi Megalenses in 141 B.C. under the direction of L. Atilius Praenestinus. Notices to that effect are found in the didascalía of the play. In antiquity it was without doubt one of the best known comedies extant, being a favorite both on the stage and for private reading. It is owing to this fact that Phormio became in antiquity the universal type of a bold and insolent man.¹ A drama (mime?) of the same name was written by ¹ Cf. Cic. Phil. II. 6, 15: . . . Phormioni alicui; pro Caec. 10, 27: . . . argentarius Sex. Clodius, cui cognomen est Phormio, nec minus niger nec minus confidens quam ille Terentianus est; cf. Valerius in the time of Cicero, but we know nothing more regarding it.

In modern times, Molière has taken the material for his comedy, Les fourberies de Scapin (1671 A.D.) from the Phormio of Terence, but has handled it with great freedom. The chief motive of the play has been changed, other material has been introduced, and the purely comic side of the play has been brought into greater prominence.

SCENE: A street in Athens, leading, as usual, on the spectators' right, to the interior of the city, and on their left, to the harbor and foreign lands. In the middle of the background stands the house of Demipho, on the left that of Chremes, and on the right that of Dorio. This scene remains unchanged throughout the play.

ACTVS I.

Sc. 1.

Davus has been asked by Geta to settle an account of long standing. He speculates as to the meaning of this urgent dun. — The whole of the first act is written in iambic senarii. For the appropriateness of this verse in introducing the audience to the general situation, see Introd., p. xxxvi.

[Davus enters from the right, carrying a bag of money, and addresses the audience.]

Sc. 2.

Geta tells how utterly futile have been his attempts to manage the two young men who have been left in his charge, how each has become involved in a love affair, and how one of them, Antipho, has even contrived to get married. All parties are now dreading the return of Antipho's father. — For the metre, see remarks at the beginning of Sc. 1.

ACTVS II.

Sc. 1 [I, 3].

The two young men discuss their unhappy lots. — As the interest quickens, the verse shifts rapidly from one metre to another until vs. 164. There Phaedria's tone suddenly changes and there follows a series of iambic octonarii, which continue till Antipho catches sight of Geta in vs. 177. The scene then closes with two iambic septenarii. Throughout the scene the words of the actors are accompanied by appropriate music from the flute. Verses 153–163 are sung. See Introd., p. xxxvi f.

SC. 2 [I, 4].

Geta enters in great excitement from the harbor. He has heard of the sudden arrival of Demipho. Antipho tries to muster courage enough to face his father, but it is of no use. He finally takes to his heels, leaving Phaedria to fight his battle for him. — Most of this scene also is accompanied by music, to which verses 178–196(?) are sung. The verse shifts rapidly from one metre to another during Geta's soliloquy and the "asides" of Antipho and Phaedria. With the dialogue between Geta and the young men, begins a series of trochaic septenarii, which continue until Antipho's flight at his father's approach (in 216). The music then ceases, and the scene ends with a dialogue in iambic senarii. For the adaptability of the different metres to different moods, see Introd., p. xxxvi f.

Sc. 3 [II, 1].

Demipho returns from his journey, enraged at what he has heard regarding his son's marriage. Phaedria and Geta try to explain matters, but the old man cannot be reconciled. — The scene opens with trochaic septenarii and iambic octonarii, accompanied by music, which continues during the soliloquy of Demipho and the "asides" of Geta and Phaedria. With the meeting between Demipho and Phaedria in 253, the music ceases and the rest of the scene is a dialogue in iambic senarii. See Introd., p. xxxvi f.

ACTVS III.

Sc. 1 [II, 2].

Geta has now seen Phormio and informed him of Demipho's return. The two enter from the market-place, still discussing the matter. Phormio expresses himself as eager for the fray. — The scene is in trochaic septenarii with musical accompaniment. See Intro., p. xxxvi f.

Sc. 2 [II, 3].

Demipho has secured three legal advisers to help him in his present straits. When Demipho gets within hearing, Phormio and Geta, pretending not to see him, indulge in a clever bit of acting for his benefit. Demipho tries to overawe and corner Phormio by sharp questioning, but he finds his match. He finally offers to compromise, but without avail, and he is left in a furious fit of anger. — The music has ceased, and there ensues a dialogue in iambic senarii. See Introd., p. xxxvi.

Abdúcere, ego illam eíciam. (warningly) dixi, Phórmio.

PH. (aping Demipho's manner) Si tu íllam attigeris sécūs quam dignumst líberam,

Dicám tibi ínpingam grándem. dixi, Démipho.

(to Geta) Si quíd opus fuerit, heús, domo me. GE. Intéllego. 440

(Exit Phormio, while Demipho walks to and fro, beside himself with rage.)

Sc. 3 [II, 4].

Demipho consults with his lawyers. Each lawyer's advice to him is as different as possible from that of the others. Demipho, bowing profoundly before their superior wisdom, is left wondering what in the world he had better do about it. The deference shown by each lawyer to the opinion of his brother lawyers adds to the humor of the scene.—The iambic senarii continue through this scene.

DEMIPHO GETA HEGIO CRATINVS CRITO

DE. (soliloquizing) Quantá me cura et sóllicitudine ádficit Gnatús, qui me et se hisce ínpediuit núptiis!

GE. At ego Ántiphonem quaéram, ut quae acta hic sít sciat.

Sed éccum ípsū uideo in témpore huc se récipere.

Sc. 4 [III, 1].

Antipho blames himself for his cowardly flight, but he finds that his interests have not been entirely neglected.— This scene is of a lyrical character throughout, in varying rhythm, and sung to the accompaniment of the flute. See Intro., p. xxxvi f.

[Antipho enters from the right.]

GE. (as Phaedria comes out of Dorio's house) Phaédria tibi adést. AN. Vbi nam? GE. Eccum ab suá (with a sly wink) palaestra exít foras.

Sc. 5 [III, 2].

Phaedria begs Dorio, the owner of Pamphila, to give him more time to collect the money with which to buy her. Dorio tells him he is tired of his whimpering, and that his motto is "first come, first served," provided the money comes too.—The music continues throughout the scene. The lyrical part, here introduced by a trochaic binarius catalectic, instead of a trochaic octonarius, as elsewhere in the play, extends with varying rhythm to vs. 503. With the entrance of Antipho into the conversation begins a series of trochaic septenarii, which continues throughout the rest of the scene. See Introd., p. xxxvi f.

ACTVS IV.

Sc. 1.

Chremes has just landed and heard the startling news of what has happened. He and Demipho are now on their way back from the harbor. — The music has ceased, and with the dialogue between the two old men, begins a series of iambic senarii, which continue as far as vs. 712. See Introd., p. xxxvi f.

DE. Quid? quâ profectus caúsa hinc es Lemnúm, Chremes, Addúxtin tecum fíliam? CH. Non. DE. Quíd ita non?

 Donéc tibi id quod póllicitus sum effécero. 590

Sc. 2.

Geta expresses his admiration for the cleverness of Phormio. The two have concocted a scheme. — For the metre see remarks at the beginning of Act IV, Sc. 1.

Sc. 3.

Geta proceeds to put into execution the scheme they have decided upon. He pretends to have been laboring with Phormio in the interest of Demipho and Chremes, and that Phormio expresses himself as willing to withdraw from his position for suitable remuneration. Demipho is wild with rage when he learns the amount demanded, but Chremes offers to help by using his wife's money, and the bargain is completed.— For the metre, see remarks at the beginning of Act IV, Sc. 1.

SC. 5.

Chremes and Demipho reappear with the money for Phormio, Chremes apprehensive, Demipho confident that no one on earth can get the better of him. In a moment of tender-heartedness, they agree that Nausistrata shall go and break the news as gently as possible to Phanium. — With the re-entering of the old men, the music begins again and there ensues a spirited dialogue in iambic octonarii. Sc. 6 [V, 1].

Chremes is startled at seeing the servant of his Lemnian wife suddenly appear in the door of Demipho's house. A conversation follows as amusing to the audience as it is bewildering to Chremes. The latter finally comprehends the situation, and his joy knows no bounds. — During Sophrona's soliloquy and the "asides" of Chremes (i.e. to 739) the scene is purely lyrical in character. The recognition of each other's identity is marked by three trochaic septenarii (739-741). Then follows Chremes' passionate appeal, with an explanation, in iambic octonarii (742-747). With the change of subject in 748 begins a series of iambic septenarii which, together with the music, continue throughout the rest of this and the next two scenes. See Intro., p. xxxvi f.

ACTVS V.

Sc. 1 [2].

Demipho has paid the money to Phormio, and now returns in a very unhappy frame of mind at the thought that they have allowed Phormio to profit by playing the rascal. Geta worries him with forebodings, and begins at the same time to feel uneasy about his own prospects. — For the metre, see remarks at the beginning of Act IV, Sc. 6.

Nausistrata

Sc. 2 [3].

Demipho returns with Nausistrata, who has agreed to break the news of the proposed arrangements to Phanium. In the meantime, she improves the opportunity of telling what she thinks of her husband. — For the metre, see remarks at the beginning of Act IV, Sc. 6.

Sc. 3 [4].

Chremes has had an interview with his daughter, and now comes rushing out to tell Demipho of his discovery, and put a stop to their proceedings against Phanium. In his excitement, he does not notice his wife, Nausistrata, in time to avoid compromising himself. Then he makes an amusing attempt to parry the embarrassing questions which his manner prompts Demipho and Nausistrata to ask.—The reappearance of Chremes is marked by a change of metre to iambic octonarii which continue, with musical accompaniment, throughout the scene. Phormio expresses his satisfaction with the turn events have taken. — The music has ceased, and the metre changes to iambic senarii, which continue to 1011. See Introd., p. xxxvi.

Inde hísce ostendam me, úbi erunt egressí foras.

Quo me ádsimularam ire ád mercatum, nón eo.

Sc. 8.

Demipho and Chremes reappear in search of Phormio, to inform him of their decision to annul the contract and take back their money; whereupon Phormio proceeds to put his new scheme into execution. He will have them understand that he proposes to be fairly dealt with, and won't be imposed upon by anybody. Phormio outfaces them, and, as words are of no avail, they resort to force. — For the metre, see remarks at the beginning of Act V, Sc. 7.

Sc. 9.

Nausistrata answers the call, and learns from Phormio the true character of her husband. The play ends with the complete discomfiture of Chremes and the triumph of the cunning Phormio. Through the intercession of Demipho, however, Chremes seems likely to be forgiven. On the whole, all parties have reason to be satisfied. — For the metre, as far as 1011, see remarks at the beginning of Sc. 7. With Nausistrata's appeal to Demipho (1011) the music begins again, and the metre changes to trochaic septenarii, which continue to the end of the play.

[Nausistrata comes out.]

NOTES.

DIDASCALIA.

THESE short notices, giving information regarding the author of the play, the date of its production, the success attending it, and other details, were known as διδασκαλῖαι, didascaliae. They were first systematically prepared by Alexandrine scholars, from whose example the Roman grammarians, after the middle of the second century B.C., adopted the custom also for Latin dramas. The most important of these grammarians was M. Terentius Varro (de actis scaenicis lib. III.; see Intro., p. xxvi f.). Their works formed the source of the didascaliae for the plays of Terence, though it was probably the grammarians of the Augustan age who first inserted them in the Mss.

Ludis Romanis : these games, celebrated in September in honor of Jupiter and lasting, in the time of Terence, about ten days, were established in remote antiquity, doubtless to commemorate some Roman victory — according to Cicero, that over the Latins at Lake Regillus. They were the oldest and most important of all the Roman games. Gladiatorial combats, rope-dancing, and theatrical performances formed the principal features.

aedilibus curulibus : the magistrates to whom was intrusted the management of the public games.

egit : brought out. See Intro., p. xxx.

L. Ambiuus Turpio : a popular actor and theatrical manager, who brought out all the plays of Terence. Cicero, de sen. 48, makes Cato refer to him as follows : Ut Turpione Ambiuio magis delectatur qui in prima cauea spectat, delectatur tamen etiam qui in ultima, etc. Since Cicero represents this dialogue as having taken place in 150 B.C., it seems probable that he was still active at that date.

L. Atilius is known to us only from the didascaliae to the plays of Terence. For the spelling Atilius, see App.

modos fecit, etc.: music by Flaccus, slave of Claudius, the genitive depending, as often, upon seruos (nom. sing.), understood. See Introd., p. xxxviii.

tibis inparibus: i.e. of unequal size, one probably for treble, the other for bass. Codex A always has TIBIS instead of TIBIIS.

tota means that the music was, throughout the play, of the character indicated. Sometimes different kinds of tibiae (see Introd., p. xxxviii f.) were used in the same play, to vary the music according to the character of the scene.

Apollodoru: archaic form of the genitive; cf. Greek -ov. The Hecyra also seems to have been borrowed from him.

Epidicazomenos: one who claims a girl in marriage, as being next of kin.

facta IIII: produced fourth in order. It was really the fifth; but as the first attempt to bring out the Hecyra proved a failure, that play seems to be here disregarded.

The fragment of didascalía found in the Bembinus (A) refers to a reproduction of the play in 141 B.C. See Introd., p. xlix f.

G. SULPICI APOLLINARIS PERIOCHA.

On the abbreviation G. instead of C., see App.

In the second century A.D., there was a great revival of interest in archaic Latin. It was during this period that brief summaries (περιοχαί), which in the case of poets are in metrical form, were prefixed to works of the early writers; see Introd., p. xxvii. In these productions, the prosody and the language of the writers in hand were carefully imitated. Such summaries were written by Sulpicius Apollinaris for the different books of Vergil's Aeneid, and for the plays of Terence. Those to the comedies of Plautus belong to the same period.

7. On the scansion of this verse, see App.

8. amaret: Sulpicius commonly uses the present in principal clauses, very rarely the perfect; but in subordinate clauses with the subjunctive, as here, he uses only the imperf. (Hec. Per. 6 is corrupt.)

12. adgnitam: archaic for agnitam, as in And. Per. 11 and Hec. Per. 11. See App.

DRAMATIS PERSONAE.

No list of dramatis personae is found in the Mss. of any play of Terence. In some of the Mss. (CFP), however, there is prefixed to each play a picture of masks representing the characters taking part in that particular play. At the beginning of each scene in the same Mss. are pictures of the actors themselves, as they are supposed to appear at some critical moment in the scene. These pictures must be regarded as representing post-Terentian presentations of the plays, as actors on the Roman stage did not wear masks in the time of Terence.

The names in fabulae palliatae are commonly Greek names, with Latin forms, though they are not always the same as those in the Greek original. Such names are usually chosen or invented as will in themselves convey some idea of the characters to whom they severally belong. For instance, in the present play, Dāvos means one of the Δάοι (identified by the ancients with the Daci); Geta, one of the Getae; Phaedria, the jolly, good-natured fellow (cf. φαιδρός); Hegio, the leading lawyer (cf. ἡγέομαι?); Cratinus, the man of power (cf. κράτος); Crito, the judge (cf. κρίνω); Dorio, lover of gifts (δῶρον); Chremes, the man who is always hemming and hawing ([χρέμω], χρέμπτομαι); Sophrona, the discreet woman (σώφρων); Demipho, a representative man (cf. Δημοφῶν); Nausistrata, the woman on the war-path; Antipho, the talker-back, the disrespectful; Phanium, the radiant one (cf. φανός); Pamphila, beloved of all. Phormio seems to be the historical name of a parasite.

PROLOGUS.

The prologue seems from Heaut. Prol. 1-2 and Hec. Prol. II, 1 to have been usually given to one of the younger actors, who was attired for the occasion in a particular costume. Into his mouth the poet put what he himself wished to say to the audience.

1. poeta uetus refers to Luscius Lanuvinus known chiefly from the allusions to him in the prologues of Terence and in the commentary of Donatus. Volcacius Sedigitus (see Introd., p. xxvi) assigns him to the ninth place among the ten noteworthy writers of palliatae. Vetus commonly refers to what has long existed and still exists; antiquos, to what has long since passed away. In 14, Terence calls himself nouos. Lanuvinus did all in his power to injure Terence and prevent the successful production of his plays. The decided success of the Eunuchus, which had been brought out shortly before this and to which verses 3 ff. allude, shows how ineffectual these attempts were.

Notice the alliteration in the first verse. Alliteration seems to be much more common in the early period of a literature than during the period of its maturity. It is far more frequent in Plautus than in Terence (though very common in the latter's prologues), and in classical times is comparatively rare. The same is true of Anglo-Saxon, as compared with later English literature.

2. transdere: for tradere. See App.

4. antehac: always dissyllabic in Terence.

5. oratione: portrayal of character; scriptura: style. Notice the chiasmus, one of the most common means of producing emphasis in Latin; cf. 13 f.^o, 20, etc.

7. ceruam fugere: in the sense of ceruam fugientem. The participial construction with verbs of perception is comparatively rare in early Latin. In classical times, such verbs take either (1) the inf. with subject acc., a construction which calls into prominence the performance of the act; or (2) a participle agreeing with an object, in which case special attention is called to the object itself, while engaged in performing the act. With verbs like uidere these two constructions express practically the same thing. If one sees that a person is running, he sees the person running, and vice versa. With such a verb as audire, however, the usage is more strict, since one may hear that a person is singing (e.g. in a neighboring town) without actually hearing that person.

These verses refer to something objectionable in the writings of Luscius. Scenes of this sort would be more suitable for tragedy, and are avoided by Terence, of whom Euanthius (4th cent. A.D.), in his preface to the plays, says: (Terentius) temperauit affectum, ne in tragoediam transiliret.

9. quom: always thus spelled till after Plautus and Terence. Cicero probably wrote cum, but quom did not come into use till several centuries later.

stetit: for the long final syllable, see Introd., p. xl. Quom, even in a causal or adversative sense, is regularly in Plautus, and commonly in Terence, construed with the indicative. The subjunctive constructions represent a comparatively late growth, due to the influence of the subjunctive qui-clauses, quom itself being a relative (from the same root as qui) with some form of tempus understood as its antecedent. We should here expect the subjunctive of indirect discourse, but the speaker prefers to keep his own point of view in the quom-clause. Stare, in the sense of succeed, as opposed to cadere (Hor. Ep. II, 1, 176), exigi (Hec. 15), and loco moueri (32), was first used of an actor who pleased the audience and so was allowed to remain upon the stage (cf. Hec. 36), then of the poet (Hor. Sat. I, 10, 17), and of the drama itself, as here and And. 27, Hec. 12. Cf. restituit locum (32), restitui in locum (Hec. 21), and tutari locum (Hec. 42).

10. actoris: the dominus gregis, manager and leading actor of the company. See Intro., p. xxx.

12-21. The whole burden of the prologues of Terence consists of answers to the unkind criticisms he received from his enemies. The prologues of Plautus, on the other hand, show a great variety of subject matter and commonly explain the plot of the play.

13. laccessisset: perfects in -ui, -ui, -ui, -iui, often drop the u before er, ist, or iss of an ending. In such cases, the e before r (after a, e, o) and the i before st and ss coalesce, except in compounds of ire, with the preceding vowel. Except in the case of verbs with monosyllabic stems, Terence probably used the full forms only at the end of a verse.

14. nouos: the nom. and acc. sing. of the 2d decl. ended, in the earliest times, in -os and -om. These endings became -us and -um about the middle of the third century B.C., except in words in which they were preceded by u (either vowel or consonantal). In such words, the old endings -os and -om remained in common use till after the Augustan period (cf. Quintil. 1, 7, 26). In some cases, when the -os or -om was preceded by qu, these endings were changed to -us and -um, and the uu was avoided by changing qu to c, e.g. ecus occurs for equos.

prōlogum: one might expect prō- to correspond with πρόλογος. The long o is probably due to association with the Latin prō; cf. prōpino (προπίνω).

15. nisi haberet: a sort of afterthought, added as a second protasis for posset, which has already served as the conclusion of si . . . lacessisset.

16-17. in medio . . . palmam esse positam: i.e. that competition for literary fame is open to all.

17. qui . . . tractant: for this reading, see App. A relative clause in indirect discourse, unless it depends directly upon another subjunctive, commonly takes in Terence the same mood as in direct discourse; e.g., in the present play, 4 fecit, 9 stetit, 21 adlatumst, 251 eueniet, 424 dico, 481 attinet, Ad. 14, 67 (bis), etc. Exceptions are rare, e.g. 455 sit factum, 876 egerint.

artem musicam: dramatic art. The term musica (μουσική) is derived from Musa (Μοῦσα), and originally included all that the Muses were supposed to preside over, i.e. all literary and artistic pursuits. Our "music" represents a later and highly specialized use of the term.

18. reicere: probably to be read with synizesis reīcere.

20. audisset bene: i.e. would have heard himself well spoken of. Cf. ἀκούειν εὖ.

21. sibi esse: see Introd., p. xl f.

rellatum: assimilated from redl., the original prefix being red as seen in red-eo, red-do. Cf. reliquias (Verg. Aen. I, 30). See App.

23. quom: see note on 9. Cf. Eun. 343, and, for the subj., Ad. 166 f.

24. animum attendite: felt as constituting a single verbal conception, and hence taking a direct object, quid uelim. Cf. animum aduertere, which became animaduertere.

25. Epidicazomenon: see Introd., p. xlvi.

27. qui aget: see Introd., p. xlii.

28. parasitus (παρά + σίτρος): table companion, originally in a good sense, but in time it came to mean one who "sponged" his living from others. These parasites were often allowed to pay for their meals by entertaining the company with stories, songs, etc. In some respects they are comparable with Shakespeare's "fools."

31. This and the following verse alludes to the first attempt to produce the Hecyra, on which occasion the troupe (grex) was hissed off from the stage (motus locost); while 33-34 alludes to the successful productions of the Heauton timorumenos and the Eunuchus. See Introd., p. xxi.

33. restituit: for another reading, see App.

ACT I, SCENE 1.

Davus is a πρόσωπον προτατικόν, i.e. a character used only for the introductory scene of a play. Terence is fond of such characters.

35. summus: most intimate.

popularis: fellow-countryman. As Davus and Dacus were loosely used by the ancients as synonymous terms (see note on dramatis personae, p. 74), and as the Daci and the Getae were related tribes on the banks of the Danube, Terence regards Davus and Geta as belonging to the same people. Perhaps, however, popularis should be taken in the more general sense of associate, fellow slave. Cf. Sall. Cat. 24, 1; 52, 14; 22, 1.

36-37. ratiuncula, relicuom pauxillulum: notice the tone of the diminutives, a little account, a trifling balance.

relicuom: always tetrasyllabic in the older writers, and probably until the Silver Age.

38. ut conficerem: sc. oravit.

39. eius modifies the substantive implied in erilem.

43. quod ille únciatim: see Introd., p. xl f.

demensum: the allowance which, according to Plaut. Stich. 60, was dealt out to the slaves on the calends of each month. Donatus on this passage says a slave received four modii (about a bushel) of corn each month; Seneca, Ep. 80, § 7, speaks of five modii and five denarii, in a similar connection.

44. genium: his very self. By genius is meant a sort of guardian spirit that was supposed to be one's constant companion from the cradle to the grave, representing in fact his very existence and watching over his welfare. Cf. Plaut. Aul. 724 f. Egomet me defraudavi animumque meum geniumque meum; also Truc. 184; Lucil. 26, 75 f.; Sen. Ep. 80, § 5. See App.

defraudare: in Ter. Ad. 246, defraudat has the better authority.

suom: see note on 14.

46. The omission of sit seems less strange on account of the half-exclamatory character of quanto labore partum. The copula is very rarely omitted except when it would be in the indicative mood; and in Plautus its omission is rare under any circumstances.

autem commonly denotes opposition, but occasionally weakens into a particle denoting merely change or transition of any sort.

47. ferietur alio munere: translate by the corresponding English colloquialism.

48. natalis dies: the extravagance of birthday festivities among both Greeks and Romans became proverbial. Observe the proceusmatic. See Introd., p. xxxiv.

49. initiantur: perhaps an allusion to the ceremony accompanying a child's admission to the family sacra. These sacra consisted of invocations, libations, and sacrifices to the family gods, the pater familias acting as priest on such occasions. The allusion may be, however, to initiation into the Eleusinian or other mysteries. See App.

50. causa: pretext.

ACT I, SCENE 2.

50. uideon: in cases like this, editors too commonly say that n(e) = nonne. Ne is non-committal. The answer yes is sometimes expected, but it is not suggested by the form of the question. In such cases, the use of -ne produces a certain rhetorical effect, the implication being that the answer may safely be left to be inferred. Cf. "Do I, or do I not, look like an honest man?"

51. rufus: red-headed. Davus wore a red wig, red being the conventional color for slaves.

52. ego: contrasted with tibi, and heightening the strangeness of the coincidence; I was trying to find you, but you have come to me, instead. For the places of emphasis in a Latin sentence, see note on 200.

obuiam conabar: we may either understand ire, fieri, esse, or the like (cf. 196, 617, etc.), or else regard conari as used absolutely, embodying within itself a certain idea of motion. Cf. Heaut. 240, dum moliantur, dum conantur, annus est.

em (ἦν): look! here! etc., while hem is an expression of surprise, joy, grief, etc., well! what!

53. lectumst: it's good money, lit. picked out, choice, probably with reference to the danger of getting counterfeit coins. However, as the standard weight of coins varied at different times, and as there would naturally be more or less prejudice against the lighter coins, lectum may here refer to weight. Cf. Pseud. 1149 (1132) argenti lectae minae; Bacch. 882 nummos probos; Pers. 437 f., 526.

numerus: sc. nummum (nummorum).

54. amo te and the fuller form, merito te amo, are common formulae for expressing thanks in colloquial Latin. Cf. amabo and si me amas, corresponding to our if you please. Sheridan uses the idiom in his Rivals: "Let me bring him down at a long shot, a long shot, Sir Lucius, if you love me." So Shakes. King Lear, Act 4, Sc. 5: "I'll love thee much, let me unseal the letter."

neclēxisse: when the subject of an infinitive can be easily supplied from the context, as here, it is frequently omitted in colloquial Latin, even when it does not refer to the subject of the principal verb; cf. 206, 315, 460, 610, 627, 681, 796, 801, 1014, 1022, 1025.

55. The "corruption of the times" has been a common subject of complaint in all ages. The "good old times" are ever praised at the expense of the degenerate present.

adeo refers to what follows; cf. 153.

59. modo ut (here approaching dummodo in meaning) commonly expresses a wished-for result; cf. 773; And. 409.

sis = si uis (pl. sultis = si uoltis), a colloquial expression, commonly used to soften the tone of an imperative. Cf. sodes, 103.

60. quoius . . . perspexeris: an adversative clause in indirect discourse, which at the same time characterizes its antecedent. A. & G. 320, e; B. 283, 3; G. 634; H. 515, III. Quoius became cuius about the beginning of the Ciceronian period. Quoi seems to have been retained till much later, to avoid confusion between cui and qui (Quintil. 1, 7, 27).

61. uerere: for uereris, as always in Terence; see Introd., p. xlv, 4.

ubi: relative, in which matter; quid, interrogative.

62. dīco: not to be confused in meaning with dīco. The last foot of an iambic senarius is always pure.

63. Chremem (corresponding to Χρέμην): more common than Chremetem in Terence. Cf. the genitive Chremi (corresponding to Χρέμου, and preserved by ancient grammarians as a reading in And. 368) side by side with Chremetis, and the vocative Chreme (corresponding to Χρέμη), side by side with Chremes.

64. quid ni: a reminiscence of the time when nī (nī-) and nē (nē-) were used in the sense of non. Cf. nī-mirum, nī-si = si ni; and for ne, nē . . . quidem, nē-scio (ē according to some authorities), nē-queo, etc.

gnatus: the substantive is thus written in Plautus and Terence, while natus is the form of the participle.

66. in Lemnum: Terence elsewhere uses the acc. of the town or island to which, without the preposition (cf. 567, 837, 907). The preposition is here used on account of the following in Ciliciam for the sake of symmetry, as Terence never omits the preposition with names of countries.

Place in which, in the case of islands (regardless of their size), is sometimes expressed by the loc. (e.g. 680, 942, 1013), sometimes by the abl. with in (e.g. 873, 1004).

Place from which, in similar cases, is expressed in Terence by ex (e) with the ablative (three times).

67. hospitem antiquom: before there were any inns or hotels for the entertainment of travelers, it was customary for people of different localities to form agreements to entertain each other whenever occasion might arise. This relation between the two parties was called hospitium, and was often handed down to the descendants of the original parties to the compact. The relation did not necessarily involve personal friendship.

For the spelling of antiquom, see note on 14.

68. Donatus says this verse refers to the presents which hospites were wont to give their guests. It is perhaps better to make it refer to opportunities for acquiring a fortune.

69. quoi: relative (what! to one), who had so much, etc. Demipho is here represented as avaricious, in order, later on (120 f.), to heighten the effect of his son's daring.

70. O, regem me, etc.: i.e. he would have made a very different use of wealth. Rex frequently means rich man, patron, cf. 338. Davus may mean, however, that if he were only ruler, he would put a stop to such amassing of wealth. The position of regem seems to favor this interpretation; - see note on 200.

oportuit: the statement of a propriety that actually existed in the past.

71. hic: see App.

72. provinciam = officium.

73. usus uenit: a common formula; cf. Heaut. 553; 556; 557.

74. memini: when used of personal experience, commonly takes the present infinitive instead of the perfect. A. & G. 336 A, note 1; G. 281, 2, N.; H. 537, 1.

deo: identical with the genius. See note on 44.

76. scapulas perdidit: cf. Plaut. Epid. 91, corium perdidit. The scapulae are frequently referred to in comedy as the part of a slave that suffered; cf. Plaut. Asin. 315; 547; Cas. 956 (G. & S.), etc.

77. istaec: either fem. plur. (scapulae), or neut. plur. For this form of the fem., cf. And. 656, haec nuptiae (according to Donatus) and Plaut. Men. 520, istaec contumeliae; 766; Pers. 498, etc.

namque, etc.: see App.

78. aduorsum stimulum calces: sc. iactare, or some similar word. Cf. the Greek proverb, πρὸς τὰ κέντρα μὴ λακτιζέτω. Cf. Plaut. Truc. 768, si stimulos pugnīs caedis, manibus plus dolet.

79. obsequi quae uellent: a clause dependent upon an inf. sometimes takes the subj. where the sense seems to call for the ind. This is probably to be accounted for by the fact that the inf. is especially frequent in indirect discourse, representing the principal verb of the direct form. Since, in indirect discourse, subordinate clauses depending upon these infinitives take the subj. (see, however, note on 17), a feeling might easily arise that when any subordinate clause depended upon an inf., the subj. was admissible.

uti foro: i.e. manage things in such a way as best to serve your own interests.

80. noster: this pronoun is freely used to designate different members of the household, e.g. the master (cf. 110, 117), the mistress (Hec. 188), her daughter (Heaut. 660), a slave (Eun. 678).

Nihil and nemo are frequently strengthened in colloquial speech by quicquam and quisquam; cf. 250.

The verb (here fecit) is often omitted in hurried narration; cf. 100, 101, 102, 104, 106 f., 113, 133, 142, 144, 440, 482, etc.

hic: with a gesture toward the house of Chremes.

86. ludum: school, i.e. for music and dancing (see 109, 144); cf. Plaut. Rud. 43, eam uidit ire e ludo fidicino domum.

reducere: for the orthography, see App.

87. See App.

88. exaduorsum ilico: exactly opposite; cf. Plaut. Most. 1064, ilico intra limen isti astate; Merc. 910, istic . . . ilico; Rud. 328, ilico hic; 836; 878; Ter. Ad. 156.

ilico: probably from in and loco, though the i is supposed by some to be the locative of is.

89. tonstrina: barber-shops were favorite lounging-places in Athens; cf. Plaut. Amph. 1011 ff.; Asin. 343 ff.; 408 ff.

90. dum . . . iret: A. & G. 328; B. 293, III, 2; G. 572.

91. illi: the locative of ille, = illic; cf. 572, 772. See App.

92. mirarier: the inf. of a verb presents the idea in its most indefinite form, and leaves the hearer, or reader, to apply it in his own way to suit the occasion. Here the context shows that the speaker is narrating, and the idea of the verb will be understood accordingly as introducing a new point in the narrative. This "historical inf." is very common in Latin comedy. For other applications of the general idea introduced by the inf., see note on 153. For the Terentian use of the inf. in -ier, see Introd., p. xlv, 5.

95. uiciniae: locative, in apposition with hic; cf. Plaut. Bacch. 205 and Mil. 273, hic proxumae uiciniae; Ter. And. 70, huc uiciniam. It might, however, be taken as partitive genitive; cf. Heaut. 110, istuc aetatis; Plaut. Capt. 382, adhuc locorum.

97. It was customary among both Greeks and Romans to lay out the body of the dead opposite the entrance to the house, with the feet turned toward the outer door. The body would thus be visible from without.

98. extra: except. This use belongs to colloquial Latin; cf. Plaut. Amph. 833, extra unum te; Ennius 46 (Ribbeck, Frag. Trag.) extra me; and the English expressions "outside of," "aside from."

101. commorat: see note on 13 for this contracted form.

ibi: this use of ibi, introducing another step in the narrative often in the combination ibi tum), belongs to colloquial Latin.

102. eamus uisere : the infinitive is used in Terence to express purpose after dare, ire, introire, mittere, but not after uenire.

103. sodes : if you please, contracted from si audes, audere being connected with avidus and originally meaning desire, be eager for, etc. The transition from this idea to that of daring may be easily traced.

104. Notice the change of tense ; cf. 135 f., 943.

quo magis diceret, etc. (as a circumstance) on account of which one might say so with all the more reason (might be mentioned the fact that) there was no, etc.

diceret : a potential subj. from a past point of view.

107. uis : the very essence.

boni : excellence as regards personal appearance, i.e. beauty.

108. inesset extinguerent : the whole scene is so vividly before him that Geta uses a tense strictly appropriate only for present time.

109. ille : see Introd. p. xl.

111. scin : i.e. scisne. Cf. uiden (for uidesne).

quam and tam are often used with verbs in early Latin to denote degree ; cf. 65.

113. ut sibi eius faciat copiam : that she allow him to meet her.

ēius : for the ēius of later times. It is often monosyllabic in Terence, as 185 (?), 483 ; Eun. 131.

enim : not for, but indeed. This use, common in Plautus and Terence, is occasionally found even in Cicero and Caesar and is preserved in the familiar enimvero.

se negat : says she won't.

114. ait and ais, regularly dissyllabic in comedy ; ain, on the contrary, is always monosyllabic.

cluem Atticam : the honor of female citizens, both by law and custom, was surrounded with the greatest sanctity.

115. uxorem uelit : the object (here eam) is frequently omitted where it may be easily supplied. Cf. 136, 296, 320, 662, 727, 830, 975, etc.

117. quid ageret : an indirect deliberative question.

nescire : see note on 92.

120. The interrogative particle is frequently omitted in colloquial Latin.

120-121. ille . . . illi: notice the strongly contrasted positions, HE give HIM, etc. See note on 200.

122. quid fiat: an indirect quotation of the preceding quid fit, just as, in answer to the question What did the man do? one might reply What did he do? (with rising inflection). There is no ellipsis of Do you ask? in such cases in English, as is shown by the fact that our question is What did he do? instead of What he did? So here no definite ellipsis of rogasne was felt, but quid fiat? is merely the echo of the preceding quid fit? the change of mood showing that the question is a quotation. Cf. 419, 685, 988, 1001, and note on nossem, 382. Sometimes, however, the original mood is retained unchanged; e.g. 389, 999.

123. qui: see note on 130.

perduint: the archaic optatives duint and perduint are found in Terence only at the end of an iambic verse, or half-verse.

125 f. A law of Solon required that, in case a person died without male issue, leaving only a daughter, her nearest male relative should, except in certain cases, marry her or else provide a dowry. Demipho, in 410, shows that he prefers for Antipho the latter alternative. For the position of the relative clause, cf. 27, 60 f., 131 f., 153 f., etc.

127. scribam dicam = $\gamma\rho\acute{\alpha}\psi\omega\ \delta\iota\kappa\eta\nu$. Dica ($\delta\iota\kappa\eta$) is found in Plautus and Terence only in the nom. and acc. sing. and acc. plural, and always in its Latinized form. Cf. 329, 439; Plaut. Aul. 759; Poen. 800; also Cic. in Ver. Act II, Lib. II, § 37. For the acc. plural, see 668.

128. adsimulabo: simulo would be the regular prose word in this sense.

129. qui fuerit pater: the later distinction between quis and qui does not seem to have been observed in early Latin; cf. 354. Even in classical times it was sometimes disregarded.

130. qui: a form (especially common in early Latin) of the abl. or loc., used of any gender or number. It may be used

(1) for the usual ablative quo or qua.

(2) as an interrogative adverb, as here, how? why? Cf. 330, 381, 396, 398, 799, 855, 915.

(3) as an indefinite particle, somehow. Cf. Ad. 810.

(4) to introduce a curse, as in 123.

With this last-mentioned use, cf. ut (utinam) which, from an adverb of manner, came to introduce a wish.

131. quod: so far as, lit. to what extent. On the punctuation of this verse, see App.

133. quid mea: sc. refert, or interest. A. & G. 222, a; B. 211, 1, a; G. 381; H. 408.

135. uentumst: cf. 129.

uincimur: cf. this present between two perfects with the perfect uēnimus between two presents in 103.

137. quid te futurumst: te is a colloquial use of the abl. of means, found with esse, feri, and facere. A. & G. 244, d; B. 218, 6; G. 401 N. 1; H. 415, III, n. 1.

138. Notice the alliteration and the play upon words. Cf. 108.

140. adeam . . . oret: these subjunctives seem best explained by supposing Geta to be quoting the fancied command of some adviser: I am to go to an advocate, I suppose, who is to plead for me as follows.

ad precatorem: cf. Heaut. 976, 1002; Plaut. Asin. 415; Pseud. 606.

141. nunc, i.e. just this once.

amitte: here, as often in Plautus and Terence in its original etymological meaning. Cf. 175, 414.

143. uel occidito: you may kill him, even; lit. even kill him. Notice how easily an expression of command passes into one of mere permission. The reverse process is seen in our use of may in commands, e.g. you may quit my presence instantly.

144. paedagogus: in humorous allusion to Phaedria's behavior—he goes about with his love, as if he were her paedagogus. Cf. 86.

146. Hiatus is here excused by the change of persons. See Introd., p. xliii.

148. quoad expectatis: lit. up to what time are you expecting? an expression framed with reference to the time when the expectation will be realized, though our idiom requires quoad to be translated by when. Cf. 462, quoad se recipiat; 524, dies, ad quam dares.

non certum scio: I have no certain knowledge, certum modifying the substantive idea involved in scio; cf. Eun. 111, 921.

When scire already has an object in the accusative, certo is used instead of certum. Cf. And. 929; Hec. 324.

150. portitores: custom-house officers, who collected the harbor dues. See Plaut. Asin. 159; Trin. 1106. Even the letters brought by an incoming ship passed through their hands, and they had the right to open those which, for any reason, they thought suspicious. Cf. Plaut. Trin. 793 ff. Iam si opsignatas non feret, dici hoc potest, Apud portitores eas resignatas sibi Inspectasque esse (see Brix³ on this passage); cf. Trin. 810.

151. num quid aliud me uis? Can I be of further service? a common formula of leave-taking, often found without the me, or the uis. Cf. Eun. 191, 363, etc. The use of two accusatives with uelle is after the analogy of verbs of asking and teaching; cf. note on 947.

ut bene sit tibi (sc. uolo, from the uis): a polite negative answer to the preceding question.

Dorcio: Geta's wife.

ACT II, SCENE 1 [I, 3].

152. heus: hello there! Like ovros.

hoc: sometimes used for huc.

Dorcium: female names derived from Greek diminutives often have neuter forms, as in the original. Cf. Phanium, Glycerium, etc.

153. adeon rem redisse, etc.: for the real force of the inf., see note on mirarier, 92. Here the context and the occasion show that the idea is one against which the speaker protests, and the inf. is accordingly felt as exclamatory. This -n (= -ne) is commonly explained as throwing the exclamation into an interrogative form, the idea of things' having come to such a pass — can it be? but Warren (Am. Journ. Phil. Vol. II., p. 75) thinks that it is an asseverative particle meaning indeed. B. 334; G. 454, N. 2.

154. ut: repeated from preceding line. This repetition occurs chiefly when the verb of the clause is at a considerable distance from the introductory word; cf. And. 830.

aduenti: substantives of the 4th decl. have for the most part in Terence their gen. in -i. The only other form of the gen. which in mentem ueniat: there comes into my mind a thought, is equivalent to meminerim, I call to mind, am mindful of, and takes the genitive for the same reason. Cf. Plaut. Rud. 685.

Terence uses for such words is that in -uis, e.g. Heaut. 287, anus (for anus).

155. quod ni: quod is of doubtful origin, but it seems to mean with reference to all of which. Cf. quod si, but if, and if.

156. quid istuc est: see App.

157. quod: see note on 155.

158. quod has for its antecedent the pronoun implied in the adverb eo.

159. non potitus essem: conclusion of a condition the protasis of which would be if he had not done so.

fuisset mi aegre: it would have been hard for me.

aliquod and quod (for aliquot and quot) are the best attested forms for Terence. The oldest and best Ms. invariably has this spelling. Not till imperial times did the forms aliquot and quot come into constant use.

160. audio: a common expression for indicating that the hearer is becoming impatient.

161. dum expecto: Antipho continues without heeding the interruption.

consuetudinem: originally, a being accustomed, familiarity, then, as here, a person with whom one is familiar. Cf. the English word love, which, though originally an abstract noun, has come to designate also the person loved.

162. dolet: impersonal as in Eun. 430; Ad. 272; Plaut. Men. 439.

quĩā sũperest: one of the few examples where a pyrrhic word (˘ ˘), followed by two short syllables, has the ictus on the ultima.

164. tua quidem: quidem frequently emphasizes the preceding word. Quidem hercle certo is a common formula in the sermo uolgaris for strengthening an assertion. Cf. And. 347; Plaut. Men. 314. Sometimes the order of words is reversed, e.g. 523, certe hercle tibi quidem. Certo seems always to follow hercle, while certe always precedes. Cf. 523; Plaut. Men. 313; Stich. 480. Notice also pol certo in Plaut. Mil. 353; Cas. 1, 55, but certe edepol in Plaut. Amph. 271, 441; Aul. 215; Pseud. 511; Merc. 444.

165. ita me di bene ament (often without bene): so help me God! the ita being exactly like this English "so," and not correlative with the following ut. Cf. 883, bene, ita me di ament, factum; 954, monstri, ita me di ament, simile. The ut-clause here depends upon deprecisci, and morte (166) should be taken as abl. of price, bargain, at the price of my death, for the privilege of enjoying, etc.

166. iam: on the spot. See note on 219.

168. quod: explicative, the fact that.

liberalem: this word designates the qualities of a typical liber, i.e. culture, generosity, kindness, etc. Cf. 623.

169. palam: notice the emphatic position. See note on 200.

170. ni . . . desit: the present subjunctive is often used in the early writers where the English would use a contrary-to-fact construction. It was probably felt, however, rather as a "less vivid future" (or "ideal") condition than as the exact equivalent of the imperfect.

istaec: iste with -ce is declined like hic, except that the neut. sing., nom. and acc., is istuc. See App.

171. quo: the cum before eo is still ringing in the ears, and answers for quo as well as for eo; cf. 476, in hac re ut aliis; and for Greek parallels, see Krüger, Gr. Spr. § 51, 11, A. 1. Where the verb of the dependent clause is not the same as that of the principal clause, the preposition is repeated, e.g. Eun. 119.

172. plerique omnes: this expression, like our most all for almost all, belongs to the sermo uolgaris. There seems to be no authority for Reisig's supposition that there is an ellipsis of uel before omnes.

nostri nosmet: when there are two or more oblique cases of personal pronouns in a clause, the acc. commonly precedes the others. But exceptions to the rule are not uncommon. — The sentiment here reminds one of Hor. Sat. 1, 1, Qui fit, Maecenas, ut nemo, quam sibi sortem seu ratio dederit, seu fors obiecerit, illa contentus uiuat.

173. uidere: Plautus and Terence regularly have -re in 2d pers. sing. pass., instead of -ris. If the pres. indic. be excepted, the same may be said of Cicero and Vergil; see note on 61.

174. de integro: Phaedria was still free to do as he pleased about pressing his suit.

- 176 f. retinere an amorem amittere: see App.
amittere: see note on 141.
 177. uideon: see note on 50.
 178. ipsus: often in early Latin for ipse.

ACT II, SCENE 2 [I, 4].

179. nullus es: a colloquial use of nullus: you are a goner!
 Cf. 942; Ad. 599.

iam: without delay. See note on 219.

celere: for celeriter, though Donatus, Charisius, and Priscian take it adjectively. Cf. Plaut. Curc. 283, Ita nunc subito propere et celere obiectumst mihi negotium.

179. Geta: the quantity of the final a is frequently doubtful. Cf. Phaedria, 830, etc. The a of the nom. sing. of the 1st decl. was originally long, and reminiscences of this original length seem to be found in Plautus and early inscriptions. Certain examples, however, are very rare. Cf. Heaut. 406, Cliniā.

180. inpendent occasionally governs the acc., though it commonly takes the dat., or in with the acc. For the acc. alone, see Lucil. 36 (Baehrens): quae res me inpendet; and for similar instances of the acc. after verbs that are commonly intransitive, cf. Plaut. Mil. 1047, me occusant; Trin. 60, me obrepseris; also 974; Men. 476, scortum accubui; Cas. II, 4, 29, eum incumbam, etc.; Lucr. I, 326, inpendere, etc.

181. inde: a change to the demonstrative idea, where the clause has begun with a relative, is common.

182. Either dūtius, or dūtius (synizesis). After 182 (or 181), the Mss. have a repetition of And. 208.

185. quod refers in a general way to Antipho's marriage, which had been the prominent thought of 182 and 184.—On ēius, see note on 113. But the verse might be read as an iambic octonarius which would give eius its usual quantity.

186. laterem lauem: cf. the proverb, πλίνθον πλόνεις, which may have stood in Terence's Greek original. Cf. Aristoph. Vesp. 280, λίθον ἐψεις.

187. animi: locative like humi, domi, etc. Cf. Eun. 274, falsus animi; Hec. 121, animi incertus; Ad. 610; discrucior animi;

Plaut. Mil. 1068, quid illam miseram animi? Verg. G. 4, 491, uictus animi, etc.

188. absque: used in Plautus and Terence only before a personal or a demonstrative pronoun, with the imperf. subj., to form the protasis of a conditional sentence; absque eo is similar to the English expression 'but for him' (= 'if it were not for him'), except that the Latin uses a verb with the prepositional phrase, while the English does not. After Terence, there is no certain instance of the use of absque before Quintilian (7, 2, 44) and then not again till Gellius. See App.

189. uidissem = prouidissem, should have looked out for.

190. conuasassem: a word defined by Nonius as meaning furto omnia colligere. It seems to be an ἀπαξ εἰρημένον, the later instances of it being traceable to this passage.

protinam: an early Latin equivalent for protinus.

nam was introduced into the text by Bentley, on the ground that the rhythm of the preceding verse always flows on, without break, into the clausula.

193. nescio quod: these two words came to be felt merely as forming an indefinite pronoun. All consciousness of nescio as a verb seems to have been lost; even in Ciceronian Latin, the expression is followed by the indic., rather than by the subj. of indirect question. In this use, the o of nescio is short; as an independent word, nescio forms a cretic (nēsciō), though exceptions to this rule may be found. Cf. Ad. 79. See App.

194. sanun: i.e. sanusne. See on 111.

195. hem: see on 52.

196. quem uolui obuiam: see on 52.

197. cedo: an imperative form, out with it; plural cette (from cedite).

198. intellexti: see Introd., p. xlv.

199. See App.

200. nam, as here used, must be carefully distinguished from nam meaning for. It is used to emphasize a question, and denotes emotion of some sort in the questioner; nam quod = quod nam, what in the world?

miser: brought into prominence by its position, wretch that I am! Generally speaking, the most emphatic points in a Latin sentence or verse are the beginning (except for the subject, when this does not precede an introductory particle) and the end (except for the verb). Emphatic ideas tend to find utterance first, but special effects are often produced by throwing an emphatic word or phrase to the end, for the mind to dwell upon. In general, it may be said that an unusual arrangement of words (e.g. reversed order, wide separation of words belonging together, juxtaposition of those contrasted, etc.) attracts special attention to such as are out of their normal position, and thus makes them emphatic. A shifting of words in the middle of a sentence is less noticeable, and so produces less emphasis. Freedom of position is limited, for purposes of emphasis, only by the necessity of avoiding obscurity, or an overburdening of the mind. For the normal order of words in a Latin sentence, see A. & G. 343; B. 348-350; G. 674; H. 560 f.

201 f. An apostrophe to his bride, Phanium. Cf. Heaut. 398; Hec. 134; 325 f.; 504; Ad. 713.

abs te seems, in the later years of Cicero, to have been supplanted by a te. See note on 378.

204. apud me: at home, as regards his mental condition; in possession of my senses. Colloquial.

nunc quom maxume: now especially, practically equivalent to nunc quam maxime. Cf. Ad. 518; And. 823. The full form of this expression would be opus est nunc ut (apud te) sis ut quom maxime (apud te es). Cf. Cic. ad Quint. 2, 6, 6.

206. commeruisse culpam: see note on 54. Commerere is used only in a bad, promerere only in a good, sense, while merere is used in both senses. Cf. Donatus on Ad. 201.

208. quom possum: see note on 9.

nihil: nonsense.

ilicet (= ire licet. Cf. scilicet, uidelicet, = scire licet, uidere licet) was a word used in dismissing any gathering. Translate: let's go.

210. uoltum contemplamini: masks were not worn by Roman actors till after the time of Terence; see Intro., p. xxxi. Such expressions as this, however, are found even in Greek comedy, though the Greek actors did wear masks.

212. uerbo: dat., not abl.

pari: the only instance in Terence of the dat. of a neuter adj. used substantively. The preceding uerbo and the tendency to alliteration facilitate such a use here. The substantive use of adjectives is rare in Terence, and does not occur at all in the nom. neut. It is chiefly found in those expressing abstract conceptions (in which case even the gen. is found, e.g. 637), and in neuters used to denote locative relations (e.g. in proximo).

scio: Donatus rightly observes: apparet hoc uerbum eo uultu dici, ut manifestum sit absenti animo esse eum, qui loquitur. See App.

215. sed hic quis: see App.

217. mane, inquam: in effect, quid agis? quo abis? had been equivalent to mane; hence inquam. Cf. Ad. 780 f.: SY. Quid agis? quo abis? DE. Mitte me. SY. Noli, inquam.

219. iam: the idea of already applied to the near future, i.e. directly, soon.

fefellerit: the present tense might seem more natural, as in Heaut. 668: nisi fallit, haud multum aberit; but the conception is rather, if I shall not prove to have been wrong.

223. quin impera: quin (qui + ne, why not? ne having at one time been used in the sense of non) seems to have been used first with the indic., e.g. quin facis? why don't you do? But such questions, when impatiently asked, are often felt as equivalent to commands. In this way quin came to be associated with the idea of commanding, and its use with the imperative arose.

225. defendendam: here in its original sense of warding off (de, away from; fendo, strike). In this sense, it is construed with the acc. of the thing warded off and the dat., or ab with the abl., of the person. But if one wards off something from a person, he defends the person; and from this feeling arose the use of the acc. of the person defended.

226. iustam . . . optumam: indirect discourse after the idea of speaking involved in oratio.

uincibilem: here used in an active sense = quae facile uincat (Donatus). For this active use of adjectives in -bilis, cf. 961, placabilis; Heaut. 205, tolerabilis. Side by side with these occur similarly formed adjectives in a passive sense: 239, incredibile; 690, utibile; And. 625, credibile and memorable (all in the neuter). In Augustan Latin such adjectives are nearly always passive, but occasionally active as in Verg. G. 1, 93, boreae penetrabile frigus; Hor. Od. 1, 3, 22, dissociabilis; etc.

227. nunc ipsast opus — ea aut, etc.: there is need of the self-same now — of that, or some better, etc. Ipsa ea are ordinarily taken together as meaning that same, but Rein has shown that ipse in Terence is placed after other pronouns in such combinations. He accordingly writes ea nunc ipsast opus, but the interpretation suggested above avoids all difficulty.

230. Do not miss the effect produced by the military terms. Succenturiati dicuntur, qui explendae centuriae gratia subiciunt se ad supplementum ordinum (Donatus). For other military terms, cf. 285, 320, 346-7.

age: a sign of assent, drive on, go ahead, then (as here), all right.

ACT II, SCENE 3 [II, 1].

231. For the force of the position of words, see note on 200.

232. imperium: the Roman father had absolute authority over all members of his family.

233. reuereri: see note on 153, and cf. 339 f.

234. uix tandem: my turn at last! Geta had expected that Demipho would vent his anger upon him first, as the one chiefly responsible for Antipho's wrong-doing. For uix tandem, ir this sense, see And. 470, uix tandem sensi stolidus.

238. illud durum: that's a hard one.

expediam: clear it up (lit. disentangle), durum though it be.

239 f. Demipho's anger seems to be giving way to other emotions. Phaedria and Geta accordingly take heart.

241. quam ob rem: he draws a general lesson from his present experience. He had waited till misfortune was upon him, and then found it had deprived him of his power to plan.

243. peregre may be used in answer to questions (1) whence (as here), (2) where, (3) whither. For this use, from abroad, see Plaut. Stich. 585; Truc. 1, 2, 26. Cf. intus exire, Plaut. Mil. 1169, 1197, and elsewhere. See App.

245. See App.

246. deputare: the idea of oportet (242) seems to be still sufficiently prominent to govern the infinitive. For the sentiment, cf. Hor. Od. 1, 9, 14.

eueniat: for the subj., see notes on 17 and 79.

247. ante eo: the indicative in apparent indirect questions is common in early Latin (see note on 358), but here incredibile quantum is probably felt merely as an adverbial expression meaning wonderfully. For a similar use of nescio quod (quis, etc.) with the indic., see note on 193.

248. meditata: deponent verbs, especially their perf. participles often have a passive signification. This is most common in colloquial language. Cf. Eun. 383 f., quae nos nostramque adulescentiam habent despiciatam.

redierit: the tense is chosen with reference, not to the time of meditata sunt, but to the future idea implied in the incommoda that will come, if, etc.

249. in pistrino: a kind of work that was especially dreaded by the slaves.

255. saluom uenire: saluom uenisse gaudeo was a common form of greeting to one returning from a journey; cf. Heaut. 407; Hec. 353; cf. also Eun. 976; Phorm. 286. Instead of gaudeo, Phorm. 610 has uolup est. For the omission of the subject of the inf., see note on 54. Demipho does not allow Phaedria to finish his greeting.

credo: impatiently and with a touch of irony, I suppose so! I dare say!

hoc: this pronoun always refers to something near, either in thought, or in actual location; here it refers to the question just asked, which is still uppermost in the speaker's mind.

256. hic: i.e. in town.

ex sententia: to your liking.

257. quid istuc est: see App. on 156.

258. bonas . . . nuptias: notice the force of the position of words: a fine marriage is this, that you have got up, etc. See note on 200.

259. id suscenses: see end of note on 263.

260. ipsum commonly denotes contrast, or opposition of some sort; here = him, himself, as contrasted with you, his advocate. The use of ipsum, instead of eum, or illum, conveys a complaint that Antipho appeared only by proxy.

261. nunc sua culpa ut: that he may know it is entirely his own fault that, etc. For the position of nunc sua culpa, see note on 200.

262. lenem . . . acerrimum: the contrast is heightened by the position of these words. See note on 200.

263. quod: the ablative originally ended in d. Quod, in cases like this, may be a reminiscence of this early form, though it is sometimes explained as an acc. The antecedent of quod is surely felt as the cause of the anger. Cf. 361. If quod is an abl., cases like id (259) will have to be explained as due to analogy.

265. noris: in both cases fut. perf. ind., equivalent to fut. If the first noris were the perf. subj. of an indefinite 2d pers. (see grammar references in note on 280), we should have omnis nouisti, instead of omnis noris. Noui, perfect in form, present in meaning, I have learned, i.e. I know; cf. odi, I have conceived hatred for, i.e. I hate; memini, I have kept in mind, i.e. I remember, etc.

266. hic, as nom. sing. of the pronoun, is regularly short in Plautus and Terence.

269. cum aliquo stares = pro aliquo stares (Donatus): for the more common ab aliquo (or alicuius parte) stares. Cf. hinc in Plaut. Men. 799, hinc stas. See note on 340, ab animo.

271. minus: too little.

rei temperans: a participial form in -ns, when used as an adjective denoting a characteristic rather than a particular act, may take the genitive, regardless of the usual government of the verb from which it comes. Cf. uxoris amans (Plaut. As. 5, 2, 7).

foret: characterizing clause, prominently involving, as characterizing clauses often do, the idea of result — a fault of such a character that the result was, etc.

rei aut famae: cf. 120, indotatam uirginem atque ignobilem, in which indotatam explains the rei and ignobilem the famae.

272. quin: following the idea of preventing, implied in non causam dico. Cf. And. 600, quid causae est, quin . . . proficiscar.

274. nostrae implies that Phaedria makes common cause with his cousin.

276. Judicial decisions were, without doubt, among the Athenians, sometimes influenced by such circumstances as are here indicated. The Roman sense of justice made this far less likely to happen at Rome.

278. nossem: the pluperfect of this word has the force of an imperfect, as the perfect (noui) has the force of a present. See note on 265.

280. tua iusta: your just rights.

respondeas: a general condition addressed to an indefinite 2d person takes the subjunctive, where the 1st and 3d persons require the indicative. This ubi-clause differs from a si-clause only in giving greater prominence to the temporal element involved in the condition. A. & G. 309, a, and 316; B. 302, 2 and 312, 2; G. 595, R. 3, 593, 1 and 590 R. 3; H. 518, 2.

281. functus . . . officium: fungor, in early Latin, regularly takes the acc. The same is true of abutor. Utor, fruor, and potior take sometimes the acc., sometimes the abl.

283. cogitata: not his thoughts (which would be quae cogitabat), but what he had planned to say, the defense he had prepared, lit., the things (that had been) thought.

284. obstupefecit: those compounds of facere, which have for their first part a verbal stem of the 2d conjugation, shorten the final e of that stem, if the preceding syllable is short (following the analogy of iambic words); pătēfacio, commōnēfacio.

287. columen: cf. the English expression, "pillar of the church," and Hor. Od. 2, 17, 4, grande decus columenque rerum.

292. seruom hominem: the English expression "servant-girl" is similar in make-up; cf. "man-servant." Also And. 755, mulier meretrix; Plant. Mil. 563; Epid. 1, 1, 58; Sall. Jug. 12, mulieris ancillae.

Slaves at Athens could not testify in court in support of their masters, nor was their evidence taken at all except in murder trials and then only under torture, as it was supposed that they could not otherwise be trusted to tell the truth. At Rome, slaves could give evidence against their masters only in cases of incest. Cf. Cic. pro Mil. 22, 59, de seruis nulla quaestio est in dominum nisi de incestu, ut fuit in Clodium.

293. testimoni dictio est: the verbal feeling in substantives in -io is still so prominent in Plautus that they sometimes take the same case after them as the verbs from which they come, e.g. Truc. 622 f., quid tibi hanc aditios? quid tibi hanc notios, inquam, amicam meam? Curc. 626. In Terence, however, the purely substantive feeling in these words is clearly uppermost, and they are accordingly construed with the genitive.

295. seruo's (seruos es): see Introd., p. xlv.

296 f. quod lex iubet: see on 125 f.

297. dotem daretis, quaereret, etc.: subjunctive in a statement of past obligation or propriety, practically equivalent to oportebat with the infinitive. Cf. 299, sumeret; 468, consuleres. For a discussion of such uses of the subjunctive, see the American Journal of Philology, Vol. XV. (Latin Prohibitive, Part II.).

298. qua ratione: for what reason?

inopem: Terence commonly uses the masc. and fem. of adjectives as substantives only when they are used in a general sense, without referring to particular persons; cf. 938, 940.

299. non ratio: it wasn't reason that was lacking. Notice the double meaning: (1) account, cause; (2) understanding, prudence.

sumeret: see on daretis, 297.

300. alicunde: from the stem of aliquis, and unde.

301. hui: sometimes hah! sometimes whew! or a whistle, as in 558 and 791.

302. dixisti: Terence commonly uses the shorter form, dixti. See Introd., p. xlv.

siquidem quisquam crederet: a Roman law known as the lex quina uicenaria (the five-and-twenty law) invalidated any contract made with a man under twenty-five years of age. Such a man was represented by his father or guardian. Perhaps Terence here has this law in mind, though purely Roman allusions are very rare in Terence.

303. potest: probably without any infinitive understood; cf. And. 327; Heaut. 677; Ad. 568; and such phrases as quantum potest (674), si quid potest (227), etc.

304. egon . . . ut patiar: ut with the subjunctive is used in questions to repudiate something which seems to be merely implied as the logical result (hence ut) of what precedes. Cf. 669. When the demand, or statement, has been clearly expressed, the subjunctive, but without ut, is used in a question implying refusal to comply, or, in the case of a statement, to believe.

Notice the indignation implied in this line by the use and the relative position of the pronouns (ego illam cum illo), all brought in before the ut. See note on 200.

305. nil suaue meritumst: Bond and Walpole, and Sloman take meritumst as the perfect tense, but this form in a passive sense is extremely rare at all times, and to Plautus and Terence it is entirely unknown. Meritum (sc. eorum) here is best taken substantively as in 1051, pol meritumst tuom; Heaut. 92, sic meritumst meum.

conmonstrarier: to be shown; demonstrarier (306), to be pointed out. For -ier see Introd., p. xlv.

307. nēmpe: you mean: for the quantity, see Introd., p. xli.

308. faxo: parenthetical. This is archaic for fecero, -so (-sis, -sit, etc.) being added to the verb-stem (fac-so). In the first and second conjugations, -sso (-ssis, -ssit, etc.) is found. These archaic endings are found in the 4th conj. only in ambissit and ambissint. Cf. the corresponding subjunctive in -sim (-sis, -sit). With the exception of faxo, faxim, and ausim, Terence uses these forms very sparingly, e.g. 742, appellassis; And. 760, excessis. See Introd., p. xlv. The tense of faxo here adds to the notion of certainty and promptness of accomplishment. Such a use of the fut. perf. is very common in early Latin. This tense is appropriate in such cases, only because the progress of the act is disregarded, and the act is conceived of as already accomplished as soon as begun. A similar feeling prompts expressions like "I must be off," instead of "I must go."

309. adduce: in early Latin, duce, dice, and face are sometimes found for duc, dic, fac; in Terence, however, dice does not occur at all and duce is found only in compounds. Face is confined to the end of a verse.

311. The first duty of a Roman, upon returning home, was to pay his respects to his household gods. Cf. Plaut. Stich. 534.

312. aliquod: commonly written aliquot. See note on 159.

313. adaiēnt: see Introd., p. xxxix, note 2.

ACT III, SCENE 1 [II, 2].

315. ais: with a long final syllable. Cf. Plaut. Capt. 1016. There is no other certain example of this quantity in Terence, but see 1040; Heaut. 883; Hec. 346.

abiisse: in the inf., in the 2d pers. (sing. and plur.) perf., and in the plupf. subj. of the simple verb ire, Terence used only one i. In the compounds of this verb, he probably used only the forms with double i, although the Mss. always have only one i.

admodum: originally much like our to an extent, to a degree, then, to the full extent, fully, or, to a high degree, i.e. very. Here translate, quite so. Cf. note on adeo, 389.

317. oppido: colloquial.

318. tute: you're the man who, etc.

exedendum: ex is intensive, like "up" in "eat up," etc.

accingerè: passive form with a middle signification, as often in the comic poets.

319. si rogit: Phormio here pauses in silent thought. The whole sentence, if expressed, would mean if he asks such and such a question, what will be my best course? He is too much absorbed to notice Geta's interruption, and in the next line continues: but see here, now (eccere)! What if he retorts so and so (reddet, sc. responsum)? I've thought out just the scheme, I think (sic, opinor). Now, then, bring the old fellow out!

eccere: only here in Terence, though used six times in Plautus.

321. cedo: see note on 197. Notice the coloring produced by the military expressions. Cf. Plaut. Pseud. 572.

323. deriuem: (de + riuos): turn aside, a figure from turning the current of a stream.

324. amicu's: cf. And. 702, forti's (for fortis es). See Introd., p. xlvi. If amicus be written, one must supply es, as in Ad. 528, tanto nequior; there is no certain instance of the nominative for the vocative after O.

325. erumpat: land.

326. periculum: the root idea of this word is that of going through; cf. the related words, περάω, pierce; πόρος, porta, a way through; experior, go through, test; peritus, one who has gone through, i.e. experienced, skilled; periculum, something gone through, i.e. trial (as here), then, becoming specialized in meaning, danger.

326. pedum . . . via: an expression suggested by in neruom (325).

327. quod: i.e. quot. See note on 159.

328. See App.

329. dum: used enclitically, as often in the comic poets with imperatives. In later Latin this use of dum is found with the imperative only in agedum, agitedum. It is the same word as the dum which means while, etc., and was probably, in its origin, an acc. expressing duration of time, a moment. With imperatives, it came to be used merely to emphasize the command.

enumquam: sometimes written en unquam. En serves to call special attention to the coming question, as one to which the answer no is expected. It commonly manifests emotion on the part of the speaker.

330. qui: see note on 130.

tenditur is the reading of the Mss., though most editors write tennitur, after Donatus.

332. enim: indeed, as often, especially in early Latin. See note on 113.

in illis . . . in illis: colloquial and rare for in his . . . in illis. A. & G. 102 a; B. 246, 1; G. 307, R.; H. 450, 1 and 2.

luditur: is frittered away. Cf. Plaut. Capt. 344; Cas. 424; Pseud. 357.

334. Notice the alliteration, which Terence employs effectively, though less often than Plautus. See note on 1. If a person did not pay damages that had been legally awarded to his creditor, the creditor was permitted to arrest him and make him his slave. The latter was then styled addictus.

337. potest: the unanimous reading of the Mss. is probably correct, though Dziatzko prefers pote, after Bentley. The omission of est with potis or pote, which Dziatzko assumes, is sufficiently characteristic of Plautus, but it is very rare in Terence.

338. immo is always corrective. It sometimes objects to something as altogether wrong, when it may be translated not at all, on the contrary; sometimes, while admitting that an assertion is true, objects to it as not being strong enough, and adds something to make it more forcible, when it may mean yes, but one would rather say, or the like. This explains the apparently contradictory definitions of the dictionaries: no, indeed; yes, indeed. Both definitions represent the same idea differently applied.

regi: patron: often used of any wealthy man.

339. tene: see note on 153 (end).

asumbolum (συμβολή, quota), scot free (without sharing the expense), alluding to the Greek custom of having feasts at which each guest bore his share of the expense.

unctum atque lautum e balineis: alluding to the custom of anointing and bathing one's person each day before dinner. — Notice that the exclamatory infinitive is here and in 884 apparently used of something agreeable to the speaker. It commonly expresses indignation, or the like.

balineis: the regular form in Plautus. Later, balneum became more common; and Plautus himself has balneator.

340. ab animo: ab is often used where the English idiom requires in, or on. Cf. ab Romanis, on the side of the Romans; a tergo, in the rear, etc. The Latin phrase is used with reference to the point of view from which an act emanates or a state is presented, the English, in a more subjective sense with reference to the speaker's own point of view.

340. quom . . . absumitur: an adversative clause, where the subj. would be required in classical times.

341. ringitur: undergoes vexations. "Ringi est stomachari tacitum; est enim translatio a canibus latratibus," says Donatus.

placeat: in a characterizing clause, the characteristic, however, being one that is aimed at, or willed. Such clauses may be termed "volitive characterizing clauses."

rideas, bibas, etc.: subj. of permission, involving the yielding of somebody's will; to be carefully distinguished from the potential.

342. dubia: doubtful; ubi tu dubites (343): where you are in doubt, etc., implying great variety; but the choice of words is made chiefly for the sake of the pun. Cf. Hor. Sat. II, 2, 77, and Auson. Mos. 102.

344. rationem ineas: forming a single verbal conception, consider, lit., go into a reckoning. The quom really introduces a condition (see note on 280, ubi respondeas), and the subj. is used only because it is addressed to an indefinite person. On the position of words in this verse, see note on 200 and cf. that on 261.

345. non habeas: in a purely rhetorical question of obligation or propriety, should you not (ought you not to) regard = surely, you ought to regard. See note on 297. Such questions must be carefully distinguished from questions of deliberation, which are in their very nature still unsettled, and ask for directions. Deliberation involves the will, and expressions of the will take ne as their negative. See, however, note on 827. In expressions of obligation, the negative is always non. See App.

347. postillā: cf. note on 800.

iam denotes relative, nunc, absolute, time; iam contrasts any time, whether in the past, the present, or the future, with a preceding time.

ACT III, SCENE 2 [II, 3].

348. enumquam: cf. 329 and note.

350. quin age: see note on 223.

hoc age, etc.: not to be translated literally. The phrase was originally used by the priest in charge of a sacrifice as an order to the proper official to dispatch the victim. It was accordingly the signal for all to observe a sacred silence. From this, it came to be used merely to invoke attention. Translate just watch me now, I'll stir him up directly. Cf. 435, see here, now! Eun. 130, pray listen!

351. deum immortalium depends upon fidem understood (cf. And. 237, 246; Heaut. 61; Eun. 943; Hec. 198; Ad. 746), the acc. being one of exclamation. Pro is also used with the vocative, e.g. 1008.

352. See note on 200 (miser), and notice how, in expressing his pretended surprise, Phormio takes advantage of the principles there laid down, negat and Demipho (352) standing first and last respectively. Demipho (of all men in the world), does he have the face actually to deny, etc. ? In the next verse, the emphasis is no longer on Demipho and negat, but on hanc and cognatam.

354. qui for the more common quis; see note on 129.

356. This verse cannot be reconciled with 386-9, and must be explained as a gloss, added by some scribe to explain 354, and later incorporated into the text.

358. quid facit: in early Latin, such apparently indirect questions often take the indicative. The reason for this may be that they are not as yet far removed from parataxis. Three stages may be assumed in such cases: (1) Vide! Auaritia quid facit! (2) Vide auaritia quid facit! (3) Vide auaritia quid faciat!

359. malitiae: A. & G. 220; B. 208, 1; G. 378; H. 409, II.

male audies: cf. 20.

360. ultra starts with the idea of beyond. According to the application of this idea, it comes to mean gratuitously, voluntarily, actually (as here), i.e. beyond what one would expect.

aduenit: the metre shows that this is present rather than perfect; see Intröd., p. xxxiv.

361. quod: see note on 263.

363. pauper: in humble circumstances, not poverty-stricken, which would be egens.

quoi: for the use of this form instead of cui, see note on 60.

opere: the sing. of opus is often used for work in the fields. Cf. Heaut. 72, 73, 142; Eun. 220; Ad. 518.

365. interea: during those days.

367. quem . . . uiderim: a classifying clause, restricting optimum. Such clauses represent a development of the characterizing clause. See App. A. & G. 320 d; B. 283, 5; G. 627 R. 1.

368. videas te atque illum narras: just look at yourself, as you represent him, i.e. in the light of his virtues (what a contrast!). See App.

malam crucem: an expression common in Plautus, but only here in Terence. A senarius is not commonly allowed to end with two iambic words. This apparent exception is to be accounted for by the fact that mala crux was a stereotyped expression, felt as a single word, which in turn could be modified by maxima, magna, etc. Cf. Plaut. Trin. 598. The crux was originally a pole upon which offenders were impaled; later, a cross to which they were bound or nailed. Hence, i in malam crucem corresponded to the English go and be hanged!

370. hanc : i.e. Phanium.

in uostram familiam : in does not here mean against, or toward, but with reference to, the reference being to a reciprocal relation rather than to the inimicitia of Phormio against the familia.

Why uostram instead of tuam?

Notice the proceleusmaticus ōb hānc ĩnīmīcītī|ās, etc. See Intro., p. xxxiv, and, for the shortening of hanc, p. xli.

371. quam : i.e. Phanium. For this separation of quam from hanc, cf. 535. Such separation produces a surprise, arrests the attention, and thus adds to the impressiveness of the utterance.

372. pergin : pergisne. On the disappearance of the s in such cases, see note on 111.

male loqui : felt as a single verbal conception, and so governing the dat. A. & G. 227 ; B. 187, II ; G. 346 ; H. 385.

373. dignum hoc illost : one might have expected dignus hoc illest.

illo : the more remote demonstrative (instead of eo), holding as it were the person or thing at a distance, hence often implying contempt. Here, such a man as that.

carcer : implying that Demipho represents all the evil qualities that a prison stands for.

374. bonorum extortor, legum contortor : as no words existed which Geta thought sufficiently suited to the occasion, he apparently manufactures some (extortor, contortor).

377. hodie seems to be often used in early Latin almost as a mere formality, without any more distinctive meaning than our "now" has in certain colloquial expressions, e.g., "He did not say so at all, now," e.g. 626 ; Hec. 788, 873 ; Plaut. Pers. 218.

378. adulescens : this word, when used as here in direct address, often implies condescension and a certain amount of contempt ; cf. the similar use of "young man."

abs : a form confined (except in compounds) almost exclusively to its combination with te. Even in this combination, it was almost entirely supplanted, in the last years of the Ciceronian period, by a. Later, when used at all, it was in affectation of archaic style.

379. potis and pote, with esse, are both used in early Latin indifferently with any gender or number; potis is here neut.; on the other hand, pote may be used as masc. or fem. For the dropping away of the s, cf. such forms as Cornelio for Cornelios, C.I.L. I, 30. In sat (for satis), the i also disappeared, but in pote it has merely weakened to e. Final s was often slighted even in the early years of Cicero, as his poetry clearly shows. Later he calls such a pronunciation subrusticum (Or. 48, 161).

380. istum gives to tuom a contemptuous turn.

381. qui: see note on 130.

diceret: following the present tense, explana. The law of the sequence of tenses allows some exceptions. See App. A. & G. 287, h; B. 268, 7; G. 509, note.

382. expiscare: of attempted action, you are trying to fish it out of me.

quasi nosses: as the perfect noui is equivalent to a present, the pluperfect is equivalent to an imperf. For the usual construction with quasi see A. & G. 312, Rem.; B. 307, 2; G. 602; H. 513, 2.

nossem: the tense is to be explained as a repetition of Phormio's nosses, with the necessary change of person. Cf. note on 122.

ita: that's what I said.

384. eho: what!

non noras: non (not here equivalent to nonne) is frequently used in questions implying surprise that a thing is not so. That the answer yes is not expected here, is shown by the fact that Demipho had just said he did not know. Phormio replies, you did not know? (strange indeed!)

385. maxume: certainly.

387. subice: prompt, lit. toss it up to (up under) me.

388. dico: where one might expect the future. Cf. our colloquial idiom, "you don't get a cent from me," for "you will not," etc., "I go (am going) to-morrow," etc.

nosses: see note on 382.

temptatum: pump.

389. tempto: the subjunctive would be more common in thus repeating Phormio's word. See note on 122.

autem: often thus used in repeating an expression which has given offense, to indicate the speaker's disapproval of, or opposition to, the sentiment; see note on 503.

adeo: (ad + eo) follows rather closely the meanings of its constituent parts: to that (such a) point (of space, time, or degree); to that point and no further, just, precisely; to that (end), with a view to that; in addition to that, i.e. moreover, besides. In this last sense, the thing added is sometimes (especially in the phrase, atque adeo) opposed to the preceding context, as here, when it may be translated, still. Cf. And. 532, 977.

mea: sc. refert, or interest. Cf. 940; Heaut. 793.

390. noueras: see note on 13.

392. non: see note on 384.

horum: masc., referring to the bystanders. With the neut. of pronouns, puDET takes the personal construction, e.g. Ad. 754, non te haec pudet; Plaut. Mil. 626; Ep. 112, etc. For the genitive with puDET in the sense of before, in the presence of, see Plaut. Trin. 912, deum me hercle atque hominum pudet; Accius in Cic. de div. 1, 31, 66; Ter. Ad. 683, me tui pudet; Liv. 3, 19, 7.

393. talentum: not a contraction of talentorum, but a reminiscence of the earlier form (-om, -um) of the gen. plur. of the 2d declension. Terence, in the body of a play, uses this early form only in liberum, deum or diuom, nummum; but in his prologues the early and shorter form is regularly used, and it is common also in later poets. The longer form in -orum came in later, after the analogy of the pronouns and of the -arum of a-stems.

394. malefaciant, since a procléusmatic cannot follow a dactyl, should be read with syncope of the e.

esses . . . proferens: approaching proferres in sense, and interesting as showing an analytic tendency even in Latin. Cf. And. 508 and 775, ut sis sciens; Cic. Verr. 1, 140, distributum habere (approaching distribuisse in meaning); perhaps also Cic. Att. 5, 12, 10, ea, quae habes instituta, perpolies.

396. quom aduenissem: differing from si aduenissem only in calling attention more particularly to the temporal element necessarily involved, i.e. to the occasion characterized by the assumed act as well as to the act itself. For quom (cum) introducing conditions, see notes on 280 and 344.

397. face: see note on 309.

398. eu: this word and euge are transferred from the Greek εὖ and εὖγε; they occur frequently in comic poets, e.g. 478, 869.

399. quibus: sc. expedire. The omission of the infinitive in such cases is common; cf. 113, 383, 447, 683, etc.

400. fuerat: fuisset would have expressed the idea as contrary to fact. Phormio uses an expression that is non-committal, pretending that the falsity of the supposition will be so self-evident, that the answer may be safely left to any one.

filius: notice the effect of placing filius before the quor, i.e. I have nothing to say to you—your son, why didn't he, etc. See note on 200.

401. filium narras: for de filio, just as one might say, "Do you talk my son to me?"

403. magistratus adi implies an intention of petitioning, hence followed by an ut-clause.

404. Notice the emphatic position of tibi, i.e. it is certain they would do it for no one else. See note on 200.

When a case was once settled in an Athenian court, there was as a rule no appeal; not so, however, at Rome.

405. solus regnas: are sole monarch, a thing abhorred by both Greeks and Romans. This ironical speech of Phormio is calculated to recall Demipho to his senses. Demipho's reply shows that it has had the desired effect.

407. uerum tamen: sometimes written together as a single word.

410. abduc hanc, minas quinque accipe: one might expect quinque minas tibi dabo, si hanc abduxeris. The use of imperatives betrays greater emotion, as does also the position of abduc hanc—an idea which in Demipho's mind crowds to the front and asserts itself before its time.

mina: Greek μνᾶ. The Latins often thus inserted a vowel to facilitate the pronunciation of words borrowed from the Greek, e.g. Alcumena (Ἀλκμήνη), Aesculapius (Ἀσκληπιός). Minæ quinque would be somewhat more than $ 90. Demipho prefers the alternative, permitted by the law, of giving dowry. See note on 125. On the reading of this verse, see App.

411. suavi's: see note on 295.

413. meretricem . . . abusus sis: for the acc., see note on 281 f. The iambic senarius seldom admits a monosyllable in the last foot unless it is joined by elision to the preceding word; but this rule does not apply to monosyllabic forms of esse. Cf. 448. See App.

414. amittere: see note on 141.

415. in se admitteret refers to a giving up of one's principles; committere is used in a more aggressive sense of offenses against society.

418. nos unde: sc. proximi sumus. For the meaning of this position of nos, see note on filius, 400.

ohe denotes impatient deprecation.

419. actum ne agas: don't kill a dead dog; more literally, don't try a suit that's already tried, a proverb originating in the custom in Athenian courts of allowing no appeal. See note on 404. This "etymological figure" is extremely common in Plautus, but comparatively rare in Terence.

non agam: a rhetorical question of obligation or propriety. There is no such thing in Latin as a negative question of deliberation, corresponding to $\mu\eta$ with the subjunctive in Greek. Questions with non which have been so classed (the few introduced by ne are all dependent) are always rhetorical questions, the answer to which is regarded by the speaker as settled. There is, then, no idea of deliberation involved. See note and App. on 345. One might expect here ne agam? depending upon a verb of ordering, understood. See App.

420. modo: only, just. Cf. 496.

423. iam ducendi aetas: see App.

425. ipsum: commonly used in apposition with something for the purpose of contrasting it with something else. Here the contrast is with uxor.

426. te: person regarded as means. The English starts with the same conception, as the use of "with" shows ("do with yourself"). See note on 137.

feceris: a true fut. pf., rather than one used, like fecero in 882, to emphasize the promptness and certainty of the future accomplishment of an act. The feeling is, it will be better for you, if you shall have done, etc. See note on 308.

427. aduorsum: post-positive, as often in early Latin, rarely in later writers.

428. infelix: cf. the English use of wretch (meaning scamp), which started with the idea of wretched, e.g. Shakespeare, Comedy of Errors, V, 1, 27:

Fie on thee, wretch! 'tis pity that thou livest
To walk where any honest men resort.

429. bene habent: se is commonly expressed; cf. e.g. 820, ut meae res sese habent.

430. feceris: see note on 426.

431. tuam has an emphatic position. B. 350, 5 c; G. 676, R. 1. expetam: repeating the thought of Phormio; like nossem, 382, except that the latter repeats also the word.

432. te uisum . . . uelim: cf. "I want nothing said about it," "I want a person called," etc.

uelim: for the subjunctive, see note on expetam, 431.

435. hoc age: see 350, note.

437. dixi: a technical term for ending a speech; cf. Cic. Verr. I, 1, end. Here it implies that he means what he says.

438. Phormio models his reply after the words of Demipho.

dignum: first means worthy, proper in conduct or character, then, as here, proper in the widest sense.

439. dīcam: not dīcam. A play upon dixi is probably intended.

440. quid: subject; opus: predicate nominative. A. & G. 243 e, R.; B. 218, 2; G. 406; H. 414, note 4.

domo me: a business-like order, in which the speaker's manner and gesture would supply the verb.

ACT III, SCENE 3 [II, 4].

442. hisce: see Intro., p. xlv.

446. eo: see note on dico, 388.

447. quid ago: such uses of the indicative in deliberative questions are very common in early Latin, and occur occasionally later, e.g. in Catullus, Vergil, and the Letters of Cicero.

Cratinum censeo and mene uis, 448: see note on 399.

448. For the monosyllabic ending, see note and App. on 413.

449 ff. Notice how, in the midst of the deference shown by the lawyers for each other's opinion, the ego and the mihī keep cropping out in what they say.

rem: interest. The word res, non-committal as it is in meaning, should always be translated to suit the context.

450. te absente: usurping the place normally occupied by the subject, receives the emphasis, showing that in the opinion of Cratinus the whole case turns upon this one point.

451. in integrum: lit. to an untouched (in, tango) condition, i.e. the marriage should be considered null and void.

453. itast: looking forward to quod homines, etc.

457. amplius: were it not that Terence seldom makes an allusion to anything purely Roman, one would think he had in mind here the technical term for adjourning a case for the purpose of collecting further evidence, viz. ampliatio.

458. num quid nos uis: see note on 151.

459. dudum: before; referring sometimes to the immediate, sometimes to the distant, past.

460. negant redisse: this omission of the subject of redisse violates common Ciceronian usage. A. & G. 336 a, 1; B. 314, 5; G. 527, 3.

461. is: emphasized by its position. The lawyers having failed, he is the last resort. See note on 200.

462. quoad se recipiat: representing the fut. ind. of direct discourse. On this use of quoad, see note on 148.

464. eccum: i.e. ecce eum; eam, eos, eas, ea, illum, etc., are similarly combined into eccam, eccos, etc. The acc. seems to be due to the general objective feeling involved in ecce, which, with its acc., is often used without reference to the construction of the rest of the sentence, e.g. 484, eccum ab sua palaestra exit foras; Plaut. Mil. 1281, nescio quis eccum incedit.

recipere: for recipientem. See note on 7.

ACT III, SCENE 4 [III, 1].

465. enim uero: generally written as a single word. Enimuero, which commonly stands first in its sentence, is a reminiscence preserved by classical Latin of the time when enim could begin a sentence.

multimodis: i.e. multis modis.

466. itane: for this use of -ne, see note on 153.

uitam: synonymous, to Antipho's mind, with Phanium.

aliis serves both as a "dative of agent" with tutandam and as the indirect object of dedisse. Some authors, e.g. Horace, are especially fond of these double constructions.

468. ut ut, sometimes written utut, is used almost exclusively with forms of esse or its equivalents, e.g. se habere.

consuleres: statement of obligation or propriety in the past. See note and App. on 297.

469. quid . . . poteretur: the acc. with potior is mostly ante- and post-classical. Terence uses the acc. three times with this verb, the abl. only once (830). The genitive is rare. The forms poteretur and potitur are preferred by Terence to those of the fourth conjugation.

470. miserae: probably dat.

471. et quidem: introducing, as often, a confirmation of a statement just made.

iam dudum . . . incusamus: when an act has begun in the past and is still going on, the English idiom refers especially to the part of it that is past, e.g. we have long been censuring; the Latin, especially to the part that is present, e.g. we are censuring already long. One is as logical and natural as the other.

qui abieris: A. & G. 320 e; B. 283, 3 a; G. 633; H. 517.

474. subolet: lit. it emits (or there is) an odor, a colloquial expression like our "smell a rat," but it is used only impersonally, or with a neuter pronoun as subject. In Heaut. 899, subolat is formed according to the 3d conjugation.

475. nisi: akin in meaning to nisi quod (except that), modifying, or making an exception to, the general assertion just made in nescio. Cf. 952 f.; And. 663 f.; Eun. 826 f.; Heaut. 541 f.

476. ut aliis: for ut in aliis. See note on 171.

strenuom hominem praebuit: with the omission (rare with praebere) of se, cf. "he showed the coward," for, "showed himself to be a coward." Apul. Met. X, 28, talem parentem praebuit qualem exhibuerat uxorem.

477. confutauit: cooled down.

478. ego quod potui porro: he modestly omits the remaining words (feci in the principal, facere in the subordinate, clause) necessary to complete the sense, condensing the mention of his own services into the smallest possible compass.

480. quid eum: the acc. is probably the object of mansurus est understood, why him? It might, however, be explained as due to the general objective feeling which prompts the question. Cf. e.g. 755.

ut aibat sese uelle: where we should expect uolebat, ut aibat, facere, etc. The position of ut aibat at the beginning makes the subordination of the rest of the sentence seem not unnatural. Cf. Ad. 648, ut opinor eas non nosse te, for eas, ut opinor, non nouisti tu.

aibat: in early Latin and in poetry, verbs of the 4th conjugation frequently have -ibam for -iebam; cf. 572, 582, 624, etc.

482. metuist: i.e. metuis est. See note on 154.

uidere: quantum metuist mihi = quantum metuo, and takes the infinitive for the same reason, e.g. in Plaut. Pseud. 305, metuont credere omnes; Catull. 64, 146; Livy, 34, 27, 10.

patruom: subject of uenire understood.

484. palaestra: humorously applied to the house where Pamphila lives.

ACT III, SCENE 5 [2].

486. non audio: see note on 388.

488. quod lubenter audias: a "predicating characterizing" (see App.) clause of the original type, something which you would gladly hear, the subjunctive still having the same force as in an independent, paratactical clause. Notice the following sorts of characterizing clauses, all expressed in Latin by the same mechanism:

1. Predicating: (a) He is a man who would cheat (original type). Cf. 554.

(b) He is a man who cheats (developed type).

2. Potential: There is no plan by which it can (may) be done (nihil est unde fiat). Cf. 597, 1030.

3. Volitive (purpose): Men are trying to make machines which shall fly; here the character of the machines is what the men purpose to bring about. Cf. 341.

Besides these, there is the characterizing clause of obligation or propriety: I see nothing on account of which you should (ought to be) glad (nihil ego uideo quod gaudeas). Such clauses are commonly classed as developed from the volitive idea, but see Am. Journ. of Philology, Vol. XV. (Latin Prohibitive, Part II.).

489. hoc: the next, this pronoun referring always to something near the speaker in thought or in actual location.

491. suo suat capiti (lest he) be fixing up something (i.e. trouble) for his own head. Geta, interrupting, gives this sudden turn to a sentence which Antipho intended to finish with an expression indicating danger to Phaedria.

uereor: such a thing would really afford him pleasure. He uses the word uereor merely to preserve the parallelism with Antipho's metuo, well knowing that he will be understood.

492. hariolare: the fact that this word has come to be used of senseless prating shows into what disrepute the calling of the harioli had already fallen.

fabulae (fari) first meant talk about something, a story; then, a special kind of story, viz. a drama; sometimes as here mere talk, i.e. nonsense.

493. faeneratum: commonly deponent, but not always; cf. Ad. 219, faenerat.

logi: λόγιοι Latinized.

497. adeon: for this use of n(e) in exclamations, see note on 153.

499-500: modeled ironically after Phaedria's last utterance.

500. phaleratis: fitted out, as it were, with phalerae (spangles), fine, showy.

ducas, ductes: of attempted action, as often.

ducas: lead (i.e. at will), deceive, cheat, as in And. 180, 644, etc.

me: see App.

ductes: frequentative, playing upon the meaning of ducas; the girl is to be cheated all the rest of her life, if she gets him. Aside from the jest, however, ductare is a technical expression for taking to one's self a concubine.

501. miseritumst: the perf., where we should expect the pres., seems to be used as a more energetic expression. Cf. "The man who hesitates has lost his chance, is lost," etc., as compared with "loses his chance," etc. Such expressions disregard the progress of the act, and look merely at the condition resulting from its prompt accomplishment. Similar uses of the perfect tense (especially in the subj. mood) are far more common in Latin than in English, e.g. in expressions like ne feceris, and in the so-called gnomic perfect. See App.

ueris: see App.

similis sui: similis takes the gen. in early Latin, the dat. (commonly) in post-Augustan Latin. The intervening period is one of transition, in which both the gen. and the dat. are frequent. With the gen., cf. "his like," "the like of him," and with the dat., "like him," "like unto him."

502. alia . . . sollicitudine: i.e. trouble (far) different from (i.e. less engrossing than) that in which he is now involved. See App.

503. autem, starting with the meaning on the other hand, but, came to be frequently used by the comic poets, in questions prompted by a feeling of opposition or reproach; e.g. 601, 775, 788; cf. note on 389.

504. fortunatissime Antipho: Phaedria has just referred (502) to Antipho as also involved in serious trouble, but at sight of the latter his tone suddenly changes, and he thinks that Antipho is fortunate after all in comparison with himself.

505. cum: seldom so far removed from its case.

506 f. auribus teneo lupum: Donatus gives, as the Greek proverb from which this was taken, τῶν ὤτων ἔχω τὸν λύκον· οὐτ' ἔχειν οὐτ' ἀφεῖναι δύναμαι.

507. See App.

508. heia, ne . . . sies : this ne clause must be regarded as dependent, careful now, lest, etc. With very rare exceptions (and these are easily accounted for), prohibitions only of the mildest sort are expressed by ne with the present subjunctive. If this were a prohibition, we should expect ne . . . fueris. B. 276 ; G. 272, 2, R.

parum : adverbs are not infrequently thus used with substantives which characterize, i.e. which are in effect adjectival. Cf. Plaut. Mil. 11, tam bellatorem ; Pers. 683, sat leno.

510. ain : what! as often.

513. dum . . . aufero : while . . . I am getting.

514. ne oppertus sies : the perf., instead of the pres. subj. or the imperat., betrays the emotion of the speaker. As regards the relative vigor of the two tenses, the difference between them is similar to that between "be gone!" and "go!" See notes on 501 and 516.

516. idem : in English one would say too ; a common use of idem where an additional statement is emphatically made regarding the same person.

fueris : for eris. Fui, fuero, etc. for sum, ero, etc., in compound tenses are especially common in early Latin in deponent verbs.

conduplicauerit : a future perf. is often used in Latin as a vigorous means of emphasizing the promptness and certainty of a future act. It will be so prompt and certain that it is indicated by a tense that lays stress upon its actual accomplishment. Cf. "Utter one word, and you are a dead man," "Have done with such talk! (if you do not, you'll repent it)," expressions prompted by a similar feeling. This use of the fut. perf. must be carefully distinguished from the true fut. perf., on the one hand, and the simple fut., on the other. See notes 501 and 514.

518. horunc : for the gender, see A. & G. 187 b ; B. 235 ; G. 286, 1, and 290 ; H. 439.

519. neque ego neque tu : probably without any definite verb understood. The lack of a verb would be supplied by an impatient gesture. Dziatzko understands potero pati ; but the idea called for seems to be, neither you nor I need bother about that—that's his own business.

519. See App.

quod es dignus: sc. accipere. See note on 399. Cf. Plaut. Pseud. 941, quantum dignus es, tantum dent.

duint: see note on 123.

520. ego te: notice the usual juxtaposition of the two pronouns, here indicating impatience and disgust: i have put up with you, etc. Where no special emphasis is intended, ego is commonly omitted.

521. contra: this prepositional use of contra is rare in early Latin. Cf. Plaut. Pseud. 155 (rejected by some); Pers. 13; Trag. Rel. 476 (Ribbeck); Ter. Ad. 44.

523. tibi quidem: see note on 164.

dies is commonly fem. in the sense of appointed time, masc. in other senses; but there are numerous exceptions to this rule, especially in poetry.

524. quam ad: see note on 148.

factum: see note on 238.

526. uanitatis: lack of principle, opposed to grauitas, solidity of character; the former means lit. emptiness, the latter, heaviness.

ob rem: like in rem, 449.

528. decipis: with long final syllable. .

Notice the contrasting position of the pronouns in this and the following lines: hic me — hic me — ego hunc — iste me — ego isti.

529. scibat: see note on 480.

532. dare: for a similar violation of the rule for tenses, see And. 379, 411, 613, etc.; and for a corresponding use of the tenses of the indicative, 486, non audio; 669, nil do; 893, non eo; 963, haereo, etc.

ACT III, SCENE 6 [3].

535. quod: sc. argentum.

535–536. hic . . . triduum: when verbs, which (like exorare) in the active voice take two accusatives, are used passively, one of the accusatives becomes the subject of the verb, and the other remains unchanged. If the active voice were here used, the clause would run, hunc si pote fuisset exorare triduum hoc. In the present passage, the hunc has become the subject nominative, and triduum hoc remains unchanged.

quod . . . promissum fuerat: an ellipsis must here be understood as the apodosis of the si-clause: which had been promised (and would have been forthcoming), if, etc.

537. qui . . . adiuerit: an adversative (sometimes called "concessive") clause; adiuerit (commonly \bar{u} , here \check{u}), instead of adiuuerit.

539. equidem: used by Terence and Cicero only with the 1st pers.; most writers, both early and late, use it also with other persons, e.g. Plaut. Epid. 601, adulescentem equidem dicebant emisse.

542. For the hiatus after itane, see Introd., p. xliii.

etiam tu hinc abis: do YOU then thus leave me to face the danger alone? Cf. Antipho's solus (539). The common interpretation, out with you! leaves the emphatic tu without meaning. Eun. 799, non tu hinc abis, cited in support of the latter interpretation, is of very different character. It is introduced by non, and the tu is very emphatic, as may be seen again in the sentence following it, scin TU ut TIBI res se habeat? Expressions of this sort which really mean out with you! have no pronoun expressed except when strong contrast with another person is intended.

543. non triumpho . . .: implies no real deliberation, i.e. shall I, or shall I not? am I not to? etc. The feeling is, I am now rejoicing over my escape from one trouble. Can it be that I am not doing so without being subject to further orders? etc. That the idea of triumpho belongs distinctly to the present, without reference to its continuance in the future, is shown by the following etiam nunc (even now, in the midst of my rejoicing).

544. in malo . . . cruce: the cruz symbolizes the greatest possible trouble. See note on 368.

ni iubeas: without your ordering. This subjunctive clause seems to be developed from a so-called "less vivid fut." ("ideal") condition, but it drifted away from this meaning, and came to be used with an indicative apodosis, referring to present time. Cf. 546, parumne est quod . . . succenset senex, ni instigemus etiam? etc.

Plaut. Merc. 692 f. (685), parumne hoc est quod amat Demipho, ni sumptuosus insuper etiam siet?

546. parūmne: the m being but slightly pronounced.

547. ni instigemus: see note on 544.

551. certumst: it is my fixed purpose.

552. quod agas: the subjunctive is due to the volitive feeling in uortant, this feeling extending through the quod-clause: do what you will — may the gods prosper it.

pedetemptim tamen: sc. agas.

554. quod . . . pigeat: a "predicating characterizing" clause of the original type. See note on 488.

555. noli metuere: a form of prohibition comparatively rare in early Latin, but by far the most common of all forms in classical times. It is the one most deferential in tone.

556. bona mala: asyndeton is especially common in expressions complementary of each other.

557. quantum opus est . . . loquere: a paratactical form of expression. See note on 358.

solae: in English one would use an adverb.

558. hui: equivalent in effect to a whistle.

The price of slaves varied according to circumstances. Xenophon (Mem. 2, 5, 2) says that some are hardly worth half a mina, while others sell for as much as ten or, in rare cases, even more. The knowledge of any art increased the value of a slave, music girls especially commanding high prices.

559. inuentas reddam: a more vigorous expression for inueniam, laying stress upon the idea that the act will be an accomplished thing in the future. See note on 516.

aufer te hinc: an injunction repeated in different words in 566. Geta thinks the neighborhood not a good place for discussing their plans.

561. ei — feret: see App.

562. amico amicus: a proverbial expression, solus being an exaggeration: to such a degree that there is no one like him.

565. quod faciam: see note on 488.

ACT IV, SCENE 1.

567. Chremes: on the vocative form of this word, see App.

569-570. postquam uidet (historical present) = postquam uidit. The act is here conceived of as prior to that of profectam esse, though no stress is laid upon the idea of priority by the tense. In manebat the imperfect tense is used because it is conceived of as still in progress at the time of profectam esse. The present uidet might equally well have been uidebat, with a corresponding change of conception. A. & G. 234; B. 287; G. 561 and 562; H. 518.

572. profectam esse aibant: strict logic would require profecta est, ut aibant.

illi: see note on 91.

573. audīeras: with the long i, cf. Hec. 813, audīerit, and Ad. 27, īerant, both confirmed by all the Mss., and the latter also by the testimony of Donatus.

574. pol: hang it! Chremes does not propose to be too closely questioned about his doings in Lemnos. He may have been at his old tricks again.

578. quod: a relative referring to the occurrence just mentioned.

579. condicionem (con + dicere): agreement; then, in a specialized matrimonial sense, match, coming at last to be applied also as here to one of the persons who formed it. The English word, "match," is also used in both senses, e.g. "They made a match," and "He is a desirable match."

extrario: outsider is an etymological equivalent.

582. adfinem: referring to relationship by marriage; consanguineus, to relationship by blood.

583. familiaritas: the relation existing between the members of a familia; then, any relation similar to it, e.g. intimacy, etc.

584. opus est scito: the neut. of the perf. pass. partic. is often thus used in the comic poets with opus est and usus est. It may be translated as though it were a gerund, though it differs from the gerund in substantivizing the conception of the verb in a perfected passive form, rather than in a progressing, active form. Cf. the English expression "There is no need of its being known," in which the use of "its" shows that "being known" is practically felt as a substantive.

585. aliqua : somehow.

586. me excutiam atque egredior domo : shell out, and clear out. Cf. Plant. Aul. 646, excute pallium. Another colloquial use of excutere is seen in Hor. Od. 3, 9, 19, excutitur Chloe, with which may be compared the slang phrase, "shook her lover," i.e. jilted him.

nam, etc.: giving the reason for having to "shell out" before leaving.

ACT IV, SCENE 2.

591. neminem : probably not to be regarded here as exactly equivalent to nullum, but as a substantive, taking up again the hominem in negative form : a cleverer man—none have I seen. Nemo in a purely adjectival sense is extremely rare, but undoubted instances seem to occur, e.g. Eun. 548, nemo homost.

593. argentum opus esse : opus is here used as a predicate noun.

quo facto fieret : representing a deliberative question of direct discourse.

fieret : this quantity of the i is found only at the end of an iambic verse or half-verse. See Introd., p. xxxix, note 2.

594. intellexerat : plupf. instead of the perf. to emphasize the promptness of the act. Cf. the similar use of the fut. perf. instead of the fut. (e.g. 516), the perf. instead of the pres. (e.g. 501).

595 f. Notice the force of the imperfects, proceeded to, etc.

596. dari : notice that this gives the cause of gratias agebat. The infinitive, however, depends upon the idea of thinking or saying implied in the expression of thanks.

597. ubi . . . ostenderet : a "potential characterizing" clause. See note on 488.

Phaediae . . . Antiphoni : notice the contrasted positions. The crowding in of Phaedria's name thus early in the sentence shows that he, above all others, was now the object of their thoughts.

598. ad forum : see App.

ulterior : further away, i.e. behind.

600. attat: by George! Cf. 963, etc.

601. pertimui: i.e. just a moment ago.

autem: see note on 503.

belua: ass that I was, belua here implying stupidity, rather than monstrosity.

603. commodius esse, etc. Translate by the equivalent English proverb. Commodus (cum + modus), measuring with, of full measure, of proper measure, suitable; then, as here, serviceable, advantageous. Cf. note on 614.

604. a primo: for this use of a, see note on 340.

605. hospitem: new-comer.

ACT IV, SCENE 3.

606. quam mox recipiat: depending upon the idea of "to see," implied in expecto.

608. quo impellat: an indirect question asking about a future fact. This should be carefully distinguished from questions like quo pacto fieret in 593. The direct form of the latter is a question about what shall occur, and takes the pres. subjunctive; the direct form of quo impellat is a question about what will occur, and takes the fut. ind. They both imply doubt, but only the former implies deliberation. Unfortunately, many grammars use the terms "dubitative" and "deliberative" indiscriminately.

609. noster: implying both familiarity and esteem. Cf. Ad. 883 ff., where a master, commonly harsh and severe, is trying to reform, and be civil to everybody: O Sure noster, salve: quid fit? quid agitur? After thus addressing Syrus, he reflects as follows upon the success of his effort: iam nunc haec tria primum addidi praeter naturam: "O noster! quid fit? quid agitur?"

610. uolup: an ante-class. adverb (opp. to aegre), common in Plautus, but occurring in Terence only here and Hec. 857.

quid agitur: how goes it?

611. compluria: very many, used here as a stronger term than the preceding multa, though it is often used in a weak sense. Compluria for complura is common in early Latin. Cf. the i in the regular gen. complurium. See App.

613. dixerat: a true plupf., referring to time prior to the last utterance of Chremes, just as one often says in reply to someone's suggestion, "I hadn't thought of that"—i.e. had not, a moment ago.

614. circumiri: colloquial, to be got around, i.e. imposed upon. For such uses of the inf., see notes on 92 and 153.

614. commodum: as a temporal adverb, is colloquial. The steps in its development may be represented thus: measuring with, having proper measure, exactly corresponding with; then, as an adverb with the idea of exactness predominating, precisely; then applied to a time, as here, just now. Cf. modo, used in the same sense. The English word "just" ("I was just discussing," etc.) had a similar development starting with the idea of ius, what is right and proper.

615. id quidem: cf. note on 164.

617. fit obuiam: see note on 52.

618. qui istanc: a suitable verb is easily supplied.

619. uisumst: seemed proper.

620. prendo . . . solum: button-hole.

621. quor non uides . . . ut: see to it that. Compare the common use of uide (to which quor non uides is practically equivalent) with ut and ne, e.g. 803, uide ne pecces; Hec. 484; Plaut. Truc. 701, uide tu tuom efficias, etc.

sic: i.e. in the way I am about to suggest.

623. liberalis: a person of fine sensibilities. See note on 168.

fugitans: shy of; felt as an adj. A. & G. 218 b; B. 204, 1 a; G. 375 and notes; H. 399, II.

624. nam: introducing an explanation of what is only implied in the preceding line: (one might otherwise expect him to resort to harsh measures) for, etc. What Geta says in 624 and 625 would have especial weight with Demipho, as it would remind him that his lawyers really advised nothing of the sort, but regarded the issue of a lawsuit as doubtful (cf. 446 f.).

modo: see note on 614.

625. auctores fuere ut: urged him to, lit. were suggesters (of the plan) that.

626. hodie: see note on 377.

628. iam id exploratumst: that point has been already looked into.

sudabis satis: you'll find it hot enough.

629. inceptas: the Germans use anfängen in exactly the same sense.

ea eloquentia may be the subject of est, or an abl. characterizing Demipho. Ea here is equivalent to talis (or tali).

630. pono: granted that; lit. I lay (it) down (as an hypothesis).

tandem: at length, at last, then as here after all.

631. capitis: referring, as often, to personal liberty and civic rights. If Phormio were beaten in the suit and the court should find damages against him, he would have no money with which to pay them. He would accordingly become Demipho's slave, thus losing his caput. Demipho on the other hand, if beaten, would be able to pay whatever damage the court might impose. His caput was not in danger.

633. dic quid uis: see note on 358.

634. in manum: cash down.

635. facessat: hinc se faciat, id est, abeat, says Donatus.

636. di sunt propitii: mental derangement of any sort was supposed to be due to the ill will of the gods; sagacity and wisdom, to their favor. Cf. e.g. Plaut. Mil. 700, di tibi propitii sunt, you are level-headed.

638. ut est ille bonus uir: so good a man is he.

commutabitis: bandy.

640. non potuit melius peruenirier eo: we could not better accomplish the purpose, etc., lit. it could not better be come through to that, etc.

643. nimum quantum: an amount that is altogether too much.

si . . . daret: a so-called "less vivid future" ("ideal") condition, from a past point of view.

644. talentum magnum: referring to the Attic silver talent, called magnum to distinguish it from other talenta of less weight and value. This Attic talent was the one most extensively recognized.

immo malum hercle: great Scott! I'll give him a big thrashing, rather (than his 'big talent'), dabo being understood from the preceding daret.

645. adeo: precisely, just. See note on 389. In this sense it is chiefly used in connection with a pronoun.

ei: with long e as in 972, 1030; Hec. 573.

646. locaret: sc. in matrimonium.

parui: A. & G. 222; B. 210, 4; G. 381 and 382; H. 408, III.

647. non suscepisse: did not undertake to rear, lit. did not take up (from the ground). A father could, if he chose, have a new-born child put to death. If he was willing to bring up the child, it was customary for him to indicate the fact by lifting it from the ground. The penurious Demipho, to avoid the extra expense of providing a dowry for her, had not reared a daughter of his own, but a worse calamity had overtaken him — he must now provide a dowry for an entire stranger. The dowries mentioned in Terence vary all the way from 5 minae (about $90) to 10 talents (about $11,000). Cf. Heaut. 838, 940; And. 950 f.

quae . . . petat: a "predicating characterizing" clause of the developed type. See note on 488.

648. ut ad pauca redeam: to put it in a nutshell, lit. to return (to the beginning and reduce all) to a few words.

illius: to be read either as illius, or illius.

651. fuerat: viewed as prior to the time of uolui. It would seem more natural to say fuit, with reference merely to the speaker's past. Cf. Ad. 686, uirginem uitiaſti, quam te non ius fuerat tangere.

652. uenibat: observe the force of the imperfect. For the form, see note on 480.

653. in seruitutem . . . ad ditem. Notice the means employed to heighten the pathos, in seruitutem instead of in matrimonium, and ad ditem (ad expressing mere motion toward, delivery at the house of, like so much merchandise) instead of diti, which would cover the "for" idea, as well as the "to" idea, and call attention to the interest felt in the proceeding and to the advantage it would bring.

pauperem: a wife who had brought only a small dowry to her husband occupied a comparatively humble position in the family.

654. erāt: cf. decipis, 528.

655. quae adferret: a "predicating characterizing" clause of the original type, thrown into the past. See note on 488.

qui dissoluerem: a clause of purpose; qui, whereby. See 130. note.

656. si uolt Demipho, etc.: notice the emphatic position of uolt, if Demipho is only willing. This implies that Phormio appreciates the excessive character of his demands, but nevertheless wishes it understood that all depends upon Demipho's yielding.

660. inprudenter (in + pro + uidens, not fore-seeing): i.e. without realizing the consequences of it all.

661. animam: an exaggeration for an enormous amount.

oppositus pignori ob: mortgaged for, lit. presented (put up against) for a pledge in consideration of.

663. oie!: whew! though it will not always bear this translation.

664. ne clama: ne with the present imperative is strictly poetical at all periods, occurring in prose only in Livy, 3, 2, 9, ne timete.

665. Notice the affected modesty of the diminutives: aediculae (663), ancillula, pluscula. With pluscula, a diminutive formed from the nom. and acc. neut. form of the comparative, cf. plusculum (Plaut. Amph. 282; Pers. 21; Cic. de or. 2, 24, 99), complusculos (Ter. Hec. 177), maiuscula (Eun. 527), meliuscula (Hec. 354), tardiuscula (Heaut. 515).

667. sane: if you will; colloquially used with imperatives.

668. sescentas: the most common word for an indefinite large sum, where the Greeks said μυπλας, and we say "a thousand."

scribito: notice that this, while a command in form, expresses hardly more than a permission, he may if he choose. The two ideas, one representing an urging, the other a yielding of the will, readily pass into each other. Cf. "you may march yourself straight home," where "may march," an expression of permission, has the force of an imperative.

669. nil do: see note on 388.

inpuratus me ille ut etiam inrideat: for the significance of the position of the first three words, see note on 200; and for the construction of ut . . . inrideat, see note on 304.

670. filium: logically the subject of ducat, grammatically the object of fac. This is a common phenomenon with fac in colloquial Latin, when the logical subject of the verb of the ut-clause precedes the ut.

673. eicitur: sc. Phanium.

674. quantum potest: quantum in this phrase seems akin to the acc. of extent and is to be translated, according to the context,

potest: i.e. fieri potest. Cf. 897; Ad. 909.

676. illi: the relatives of the girl to whom he claimed to be betrothed.

iam: at once, modifies the whole conception, constituerunt dare; hence its position before the entire phrase, instead of immediately before dare. The dowry was commonly given shortly before the wedding.

677. repudium renuntiet: break off the engagement, lit. give notice of the separation. Cf. 928, repudium remittere. The re- (in renuntiare and remittere) emphasizes the idea of restoration to a previous condition.

678. quae quidem illi res: the expression quae res . . bene uortat was a common formula for invoking a blessing upon any transaction. His having the usual formula in mind accounts for the contrasting quidem: and may this piece of work — not, as is the usual prayer, prosper (bene uortat) — but uortat male.

679. adeo: very, lit. to that degree, to such a degree, so, then very. Cf. "I am so glad to see you," i.e. very glad. See note on 389.

680. Lemni: see note on 66.

681. dixero: not a true fut. perf. See English parallels cited in note on conduplicauerit, 516.

ACT IV, SCENE 4.

682. hem: hello! indicating his surprise at finding Antipho here.
emunxi: cleaned out.

683. satin est id: an expression intended by Antipho to mean, Is that all you have done? i.e. you know you have betrayed me besides. Geta, trifling, pretends to understand it as referring to the amount of money, and replies: hanged if I know (whether it is enough, or not): it is all I was told to get. See note on 399.

684. eho: take that!

uerbero: you whipping-post (uerberare, to flog).

685. narras: i.e. mean (by the above question).

narrem: merely echoing the preceding narras. See note on 122
Cf. 382, 389.

686. mihi quidem: the quidem contrasting mihi with others in whose fortunes Geta was truly interested; it conveys complaint at Geta's supposed faithlessness to the speaker. Contrast is also intended with the te quidem of the next line.

redit = rediit, as often. Cf. 55. The verse is probably to be read as follows: ad rés|tim míhi|quidem rés|redit| etc.

planissime: in translating, reproduce the force of the position of this word by a phrase of corresponding emphasis.

687. ut = utinam: cf. 711, 773.

di deae, superi inferi: asyndeton seems especially common in hurried or emotional expressions. This is due to a general tendency to omit, under excitement, what may easily be supplied.

688. exemplum: example, then (as here) specialized in meaning, punishment, which makes a person an example to others.

si . . . uelis: for the subjunctive, see A. & G. 309 a; B. 302, 2; G. 595 R. 3; H. 508, 5, 2.

689. qui . . . auferat: who would, etc.

ad scopulum: ad first meant toward, then by implication all the way to, and finally, this last idea becoming specialized as here, against.

690. utibile = utile, common in Plautus, but only here in Terence.

694. enim: indeed. See note on 332.

noui: i.e. I dare say!

695-696. As Phormio would not be able to pay back the money, he would have to choose one of two courses: he could stand by his agreement to marry Phanium, or else suffer the legal penalty for breach of contract.

697. quin . . . possit: A. & G. 319 d; B. 283, 4; G. 632; H. 504.

699. iam si argentum acceperit: if he receives the money, the conclusion at once (iam) follows that he must marry her. Iam strictly modifies neither acceperit nor ducendast, but rather the mental act of deciding what the logical conclusion of the condition would ultimately be. See App.

701. tandem: after all. Cf. Lucr. 5, 137.

702. uocandi: sc. amicos. Cf. 453.

sacrificandi: a wedding was preceded by sacrifices offered to the deities of marriage, especially to Hera.

paululum: notice the very emphatic position, at least some little, etc. This word is variously used as an adverb, an adjective, and a substantive.

704. iste: your man.

705. quod: i.e. quot. See note on 159.

706. ater canis: a common object of superstition. It will be remembered that Goethe represents the devil as appearing to Faust in the form of a black poodle.

707. inpluuium commonly refers to a basin set in the floor of the house, into which fell the water from the roof through an opening directly above. This opening was called the compluuium. Occasionally, however, either one of these terms is used to denote the entire uncovered space including both the opening in the roof and the basin in the floor. Cf. Cic. Verr. I, 1, 23, 61; Serv. Verg. Aen. 2, 5, 12; Plaut. Mil. 159, 287, etc.

708. gallina cecinit: Donatus says this was an indication that the wife would survive the husband.

708-709. interdixit hariolus; haruspex uetuit, etc. It was customary, when anything of importance was to be done, to learn the will of the gods regarding it by consulting their interpreters.

709. ante brumam: before the winter solstice, Dec. 21, as Chremes had just returned from Lemnos with the income of his wife's estate (679 f.). It must then have been after harvest time. As he was later than usual in going thither (569), and remained there unexpectedly long (572-3), we may suppose the time to be about the first of November.

711. iustissima, superlative and emphatic by its position, is a sarcastic thrust at the utterances of the soothsayers. See note on hariolare, 492.

712. ut = utinam.

ACT IV, SCENE 5.

713. quid uerborum duit: give us any of his nonsense; uerba dare, to give words (and nothing but words), i.e. to practise deceit.

714. hoc: he is holding fast to his money-bag.

amittam: let get away, lit. send away.

ego a me: notice the juxtaposition (see note on 520) of the pronouns, both in a very emphatic position. There is an important, swaggering air about the whole speech.

quin . . . adhibeam: A. & G. 319 d; B. 283, 4; G. 556; H. 504.

715. ut cautus est: this differs from quam cautus est, in that ut is an adverb of manner, and quam an adverb of degree.

716. opus factost: see note on 584.

718. rem ipsam: the very thing (that is going to happen), referring to reiciat.

720. nuptum: the supine was originally the acc. of a verbal noun used to express limit of motion, which fact explains why the construction is used only with verbs expressing or implying motion. Here dare Phormioni implies motion.

723. malum: the deuce. A parenthetical acc. of exclamation, that became a mere interjection. Cf. 948, 976; Ad. 544; and Donatus' note on Eun. 4, 7, 10.

tua . . . refert: A. & G. 222; B. 211, 4; G. 381; H. 408, I, 2.

ACT IV, SCENE 6 [V, 1].

728. quo: = ad quem?

referam: a technical term found in such expressions as rem ad senatum referre, to lay a matter before the senate.

730. The position of era shows that her mistress was uppermost in her mind. The word, like the thought, comes first. See note on 200.

suasum: she had advised the marriage with Antipho.

732. nam quis: often in colloquial Latin for quisnam. This use of nam must not be confused with the inferential nam; it merely emphasizes the question and commonly implies wonder, surprise, etc.

a fratre: from my brother's.

The position of exanimata a fratre, coming as it does before the quae, indicates the astonishment of the speaker. See note on 200.

733. quod: referring in a general way to the part she had taken in bringing about the marriage.

quom scirem: on the subjunctive in adversative clauses in early Latin, see note on 22.

infirmas: divorce was easy, and the extent of Demipho's influence upon his son was an unknown quantity.

734. id consulerem: consulo sometimes means duly consider, and in this sense takes an acc. of direct object. Cf. Plaut. Most. 1088; Pers. 840, etc.

interea: i.e. until they should find Phanium's father.

736. quid ago: see note on 447.

737. adeo an maneo: see note on 447.

dum . . . cognosco: see note on 513.

741. hinc, away from here, shows that they were both standing near Chremes' house; istorsum (isto + uorsum), (further along in your direction), shows that Sophrona was, however, further from it than was Chremes. This is natural, as she had just come from Demipho's house.

741. sodes: see note on 103.

742. ne . . . appellassis: for the form, see note on 308; for the force of the perfect in prohibitions, see that on 514.

743. st counts in the verse for a long syllable.

744. saeuam: notice the force of the position, who is a perfect terror.

746. aliqua: see note on 585.

747. istoc: causal ablative in emphatic position, it was on that account.

749. illae: the reference would be readily understood by Sophrona.

750. aegritudine: not used of bodily ills until after the Augustan period.

751. male factum: too bad! a mild expression for such an occasion, but not surprising coming as it does from Chremes. Est is regularly omitted with male factum and bene factum. See note on factum, 524.

quae . . . essem: causal.

752. nuptum: cf. 645 and 720.

754. au: an exclamation confined to women, mercy on me! Elision does not commonly occur in monosyllabic interjections. See Introd., p. xliii.

duasne uxores habet: there is much human nature in Chremes' astonishment that anyone else could have been guilty of such a thing. Chremes does not appreciate the humor of the question, but his audience would.

755. illam alteram: see note on 480.

ergo: here merely an emphasizing particle.

756. posset: subjunctive expressing purpose. It might be felt as an indirect question, by an agreement as to how he could, etc.

757. sine dote: a dowry was ordinarily thought necessary, in order that a clear distinction might be made between a wife and a mere concubine.

uostram fidem: an acc. of exclamation, to be accounted for as the object toward which the speaker's emotion is directed. No definite verb need be supplied.

uostram: objective, in you.

temere: a less general term than forte, implying specifically absence of design or thought.

759. ut uolebam: referring in a general way to his satisfaction with all the circumstances of the present arrangement.

760. ambo implies concerted action on the part of the two brothers, with a common purpose; uterque would imply independent action.

opere maxumo: magno opere was commonly felt as a mere adverb and was often written magnopere. Occasionally, and especially in early Latin, the two parts were felt as sufficiently distinct to admit of a comparison of the magno.

fieret is commonly fīeret at the end of an iambic verse; cf. 593; and see Introd., p. xxxix, note 2.

761. hic solus: i.e. Antipho.

762. opus facto: see note on 584.

763. oppido: cf. 317.

765. scibit: see Introd., p. xlv, 2.

ACT V, SCENE 1 [2].

766. nostrapte: this -pte is common only with the abl. sing. of possessive pronouns. It emphasizes the possessive idea, nostrapte meaning our own. Cf. Heaut. 388, expedit bonas esse uobis.

767. bonos, instead of boni, shows that nos is probably the acc. case.

768. ita fugias ne praeter casam: (in running away) so run that, in addition to your hut (you do not lose your head); probably a proverbial expression, from which the rest of the ne-clause (caput quoque amittas, or the like, is omitted. Proverbs are often quoted in an incomplete form, e.g. Cic. de orat. II, 64, 258 agas asellum; de finibus III, 4, 16 fortuna fortis; Arist. Vesp. 1422, ἕδροι τις (to be filled out with ἦν ἕκαστος εἰδείη τέχνην); cf. also "sapienti sat," "birds of a feather," "a word to the wise." See App.

770. qui: see note on 130.

qui uiuat: a "potential characterizing" clause, though the volitive feeling of sit colors the subordinate clause. See note on 488.

771. qui recta praua faciunt: the things of which Phormio had been guilty were really praua, but they had been made to appear recta.

772. illi: for illic = in illa re. See note on 91.

ut stultissime quidem illi rem gesserimus: that we have acted like consummate fools! A clause exclamatory in feeling, but conceived of as also expressing the result (hence ut) of circumstances.

gesserimus: the i of the perf. subj. was originally long, and this quantity is sometimes retained in the 2d pers. sing. and in the 1st and 2d pers. plur.

773. modo ut: introducing a wish.

hoc consilio: abl. of means, the following ut-clause being one of result.

possiet discedi: impersonal, we can accomplish the desired end, lit. it can be come off (by us). For this use of discedere, cf. the English phrase, "to come off victorious"; 1047, pulchre discedo. For the form possiet, see Intro., p. xxxix, note 2.

774. haud scio . . . an: this phrase originally meant, as here, I do not know whether (or not), etc.; but in classical times it had come to mean, I am inclined to think that.

775. mutet: merely re-echoing the mutet of Geta. See note on 122.

autem: see note on 503.

776. ita faciam . . . ut . . . adducam: I will so do as to bring, etc., a circumlocution equivalent merely to adducam, the ut . . . censuit being parenthetical.

777. prae: prepositions were originally adverbs; these later became specialized in use and associated with particular cases. The early stage is represented in Greek by Homer, in whose verse the particles that were later prepositions are still drifting freely about. In Latin, reminiscences of this early use are rare except in the adverbial use of ante and post, and a few other words; prae is occasionally an adverb as here; also pro in pro ut, according as, and sub and de in su(b)sque deque, both up and down.

779. praesentia: agreeing with tempora understood.

780. uorsuram solues: uorsura means a turnabout, with reference to a debt, a borrowing of money to pay a debt. The expression uorsuram soluere seems to be a fusing together of uorsuram facere and uorsura soluere. Geta means that, in procuring the money for Phaedria, he has led the old man to believe that they need give themselves no further anxiety about Phanium. This trouble is for the present settled, but only at the expense of still more serious complications later on, when the true state of things becomes known. Cf. the next line, praesens quod fuerat malum, in diem abiit.

in diem: for the time being. The force of the preposition in such phrases seems to be with reference to, directing one's view toward, which is closely akin to the idea of motion implied by in with the acc. Cf. Eun. 1020; Cic. de or. 2, 40, 169, in diem uiuere, to live with reference (only) to the time being.

783. eius: i.e. Nausistrata (cf. 776 f.). A slight gesture would prevent all ambiguity. See App.

ACT V, SCENE 2 [3].

784. ut soles: in your happy way. Demipho realizes that she is a woman who must be gently handled, but he is equal to the occasion; cf. Scene 9.

786. Notice the contrast obtained by chiasmus, nunc opere—re dudum. For the allusion in re, see 681.

787. factum uolo: it is just as I would have it, i.e. you are quite welcome, lit. I wish it done, a polite formula of approval. Cf. Plaut. Bacch. 495.

788. bene parta: hard-earned acquisitions. For similar uses of the participles, cf. bene facta, male facta, bene dictum (20).

789. bina: two each year, hence bina instead of duo.

790. statim (from stare, to stand): regularly, as a standing thing. With another application of its root-idea, statim means while still standing, without changing position, hence immediately. Cf. "on the spot."

791. rebus uilioribus: in Latin comedy, the temporal element is nearly always prominent in the abl. abs. It never gets further away from that idea than in the present instance.

hui: a whistle of pretended surprise.

792. quid haec uidentur: how does that strike you?

scilicet: I should say so! in answer to Nausistrata's question, which really meant isn't the contrast striking?

793. parce: sc. tibi, or uoci.

794. ut possis cum illa: an ellipsis is to be felt of some infin., meaning to deal with, cope with, or the like. Demipho expected there would be a scene, possibly a storm (cf. ne suscenseat in 720), when Nausistrata broke the news to Phanium.

795. abs te: see note on 732.

ACT V, SCENE 3 [4].

796. nonlem datum = uellem non datum (esse).

797. paene plus: sc. dixi, or a similar word.

798. iam recte: it's all right; cf. the German phrase schon recht. Chremes, having by this time noticed his wife, hardly knows at first what he is saying. As he has to say something, iam recte serves as well as anything. Demipho, true to his nature, promptly gets impatient at his brother's strange conduct.

quid tu: the emphatic tu makes the expression very different in tone from a mere quid, or quid ais, to which it has sometimes been said to be equivalent. It practically amounts to, what is the matter with you? With tu, probably no particular verb was felt to be omitted; it merely stands in a general way as the subject of action.

800. nostra: sc. refert. Cf. 723.

magni: sc. refert. Cf. 723.

praeterhac: a form common in Plautus, but occurring in Terence only here, and possibly Ad. 847. Praeterhac differs from praeterea in meaning, as haec differs from ea. See note on 347.

801. sic erit gives assurance of future confirmation. Cf. Heaut. 1014; Ad. 182, etc.

802. satin = satisne.

803. au: see note on 754.

805. Chremes has been making signs to Demipho throughout the scene, and now begins to get desperate at his failure to make him understand.

806. nil: i.e. nonsense.

quid siet: what it's all about.

perdis: cf. 856, where enicus is similarly used.

807. equidem hercle nescio: I'll be hanged if I know!

ita . . . ut: as truly as.

at: often used, as here, in introducing imprecations and occasionally also in friendly prayers. See Harper's Dict. B, 3, c and d. The at denotes a sort of opposition to the general situation.

808. uostram fidem: see note on 757.

809. ipsam: contrasted with Chremes.

aut scire aut nescire: i.e. to know the truth or falsity of.

ah: an exclamation caused by Demipho's una omnis, which would include Nausistrata.

810. apud: with personal object, commonly calls attention to the characteristics or the vocation of its object. If you are a banker, apud te means at your bank; if a merchant, at your store; if an author, in your works; if merely thought of as a private individual, at your house, in your make-up as a man, i.e. in your heart, in your eyes, or the like.

811. uin satis quaesitum mi istuc esse: do you wish me to have done with my questions? lit. do you wish that matter to have been inquired about enough by me?

812. amici nostri: said with a significant look, as a safe way of referring, in the presence of Nausistrata, to the daughter of Chremes himself.

hanc: i.e. Nausistrata, not Phanium. Cf. 813, ire igitur tibi licet, Nausistrata.

813. quid ni: see note on 64.

illa: while in reality referring to the same person as illa filia above (811), viz. to Phanium, is not so understood by Demipho. By illa filia, he means the daughter of Chremes; by illa maneat, Antipho's present wife, whom he supposes to be another person.

814. sic: anticipating manere hanc, 815.

815. perliberalis: very lady-like. See note on 623.

817. respiciunt originally meant look back at; then, as this act would imply interest in the thing looked at, it developed the meaning take interest in, care for. Cf. the English derivative from it, "respect."

818. potuit: cf. note on 303. See App.

819. heus: mind you!

ACT V, SCENE 4.

820. ut: however. Sloman's interpretation, considering that, would require an adverb with sese habent.

fratri: used here for fratri patrueli, cousin, as in Cic. Clu. 24, 60; ad Att. 1, 5, 1; Cat. 66, 22.

821. scitum: from scisco.

822. quas: perhaps the only instance (excepting one or two in late Latin) of the acc. with medeor; medicor, however, occurs with the acc. in Verg. Aen. 7, 756.

quom . . . sient: a general condition in which we should expect the indicative, were it not colored by the verbs (mederi possis) of the clause in which it stands.

quas possis: a predicating characterizing clause (see note on 488); the potential idea that is felt lies in the meaning of the verb itself, not in the mood.

825. si . . . celetur: referring "less vividly" to the future as a more remote possibility.

sin patefit: the change of mood seems to indicate a greater probability of the actual coming-to-pass of this condition. The present tense, treating the act as one that is possibly already in progress, is perhaps due to the same feeling.

When facio is compounded with prepositions, it forms its passive regularly, e.g. inficior; when compounded with other parts of speech, it follows its own conjugation, e.g. patefio, commonefio, etc.

ACT V, SCENE 5.

830. Phaedria: for the quantity of the final a, see note on Geta, 179.

propria: as his own. For the construction and the form of poteretur, see note on 469.

emissast manu: i.e. released from the manus, or power of her master. This giving up of all claim to a slave was symbolized by a ceremony in which the master first took hold of the slave, as still his own, turned him about, and then released him from his grasp, a free man.

832. aliquod: see note on 159.

sumam: take, appropriate. Cf. Ad. 287, 854.

833. quid ais? An expression used merely to attract attention, like "Say!" "O say!" "I say!"

834. satietaem amoris . . . absumere: take his fill of love.

835. partis tuas acturus est reminds one of Demipho's former words (267), tradunt operas mutuas.

837. Sunium: a town on the southern coast of Attica, near the promontory of the same name. It was evidently famous as a slave market.

838. dudum: viz. in 665.

840. ostium concrepuit: the doors of Greek houses often opened outward. They were frequently (regularly, in the case of families who could not afford to keep an ostiarus to tend the door) kept bolted on the inside (cf. Heaut. 275 ff.; Ad. 634). The expression ostium concrepuit seems to refer to the noise attendant upon drawing the bolt and starting the door, all of which would indicate that some one was about to come out. It is commonly explained, chiefly on the authority of Plutarch (Poplic. 20), as referring to a knock by which a person about to come out is supposed to have warned passers-by against the danger of being hit by the door. But such extreme precaution would in any case seem absurd and unnecessary, especially so when we know that other noises accompanied the opening of a locked door, in ancient, as well as in modern, times. Another serious objection is the fact that concrepare refers to a rattling, creaking, or grating sound, not at all to anything like a knock, which is indicated by pulsare, pultare, pellere, — words never used of persons about to come out of a house. Plutarch's remarks are professedly based upon expressions of this sort found in the comic poets, and are probably due to a misunderstanding.

The tense of concrepuit is to be explained as referring to the instant before, just as we upon hearing a knock may say, "some one knocked," as well as "some one is knocking."

ACT V, SCENE 6.

841. Fortuna and Fors Fortuna: the words uostra and onerastis in the next verse show that the conception here is of two distinct deities.

843. quid sibi uolt: what does he mean?

844. mihi: A. & G. 236; B. 188, 2 b; G. 351; H. 389. Cf. Plaut. Epid. 344, mihi cesso, quom sto.

umerum hunc onero pallio: the pallium (after which the fabu lae palliatae took their name) was worn out of doors, even by slaves. When there was need of haste, the lower folds of the garment were drawn up (and here thrown over the shoulder), so as not to impede one's progress.

845. adque: i.e. atque; see Introd., p. xliv.

quae . . . contigerint: the subjunctive is probably due to the influence of sciat; but it would be possible in such familiar speech to regard the quae as interrogative instead of relative, that he may know of all this, viz. what has happened.

847. em tibi: see that, will you? For tibi, see on mihi above, 844.

848. reuocari, cursum quom institeris: probably alluding to some practical joke that was wont to be practised on slaves, similar to that practised by boys nowadays in calling to a person on the street, and then asking him how far he would have been if he had not stopped.

849. pergit hercle: he is deucedly persistent.

odio tuo: your odious conduct. Cf. Hor. Sat. 1, 7, 6, odio qui posset uincere regem.

850. uapula: you be hanged! lit. be flogged!

851. familiariorem: pretty intimately connected with me.

852. ipsust: see note on 178.

853. O is here elided, thus forming an exception to the rule. See note on au, 754.

quantum est: an expression of quantity, where we should expect an expression of number. It would seem still more natural to omit the phrase altogether.

854. solus: i.e. to a very exceptional degree.

diligere: not an infinitive.

856. delibutum . . . reddo: see note on 559.

delibutum gaudio: steeped in joy, lit. besmeared with joy.

858. aderas: in English one would be likely to use the perf., have you been here all the time? but the imperfect is quite intelligible, referring to the immediate past.

859. apud forum: Terence never says in foro, though that phrase is common in Plautus. See And. 254, 302, 745; Ad. 154, 404, 572.

861. omitto proloqui: it is merely for the sake of convenience in explaining what happened, that Terence represents Geta as sent to Phanium. That occurrence is accordingly briefly dismissed.

862. gynaeceum: there were two distinct parts to a Greek house, — the andronitis, or men's apartments, and the gynaecoonitis, or women's apartments, also called the gynaeceum. The Greek women were kept in close seclusion in the back part of the house.

866. Notice the readiness with which the Latin at all times falls into indirect discourse.

867. suspensio gradu: translate by the corresponding English idiom.

ire perrexi: practically equivalent to ibam, the idea of progressive action being expressed by a separate word, instead of being left to the less definite imperfect tense. This, too, makes it possible to leave the series of perfects unbroken, and thus heighten the rhetorical effect.

astiti: not from asto.

868. animum commonly refers to the thinking, feeling part of a man, mind, soul; animam, merely to that which he shares with all living things, the life principle, or, as in this line, the breath.

869. hoc modo: like this. He puts his hand to his ear and leans forward, to show how it was done. This interpretation of hoc modo is more in harmony with the liveliness of the narration than to take it as referring tamely to what he has previously said.

869. captans: the frequentative calls attention to the eagerness with which the act was performed.

870. paene is, with verbs, commonly used only with a perfect tense; it is not found with the imperfect, because in its very nature it has reference to failure of accomplishment, rather than of progress. It is rarely found with the subjunctive.

871. mirificissimum: for the more common classical form.

872. uxori: the dat. of reference where one might expect a gen. Cf. "servant to the queen." Such a dat. is common in the predicate with est, but instances like uxori, where the dat. depends upon the substantive, are rare. Cf. Plaut. Mil. 1431, Py. Quis erat igitur? Sc. Philocomasio amator. The dat. differs from the gen. in such cases, in calling attention to the idea of interest involved.

873. in Lemno: see note on 66.

874. utin . . . ignoraret: see note on 304.

credito: the present imperative would be expected. A. & G. 269, d; B. 281, 1; G. 268; H. 487.

876. ipsi emphasizes the idea of secrecy.

877. inaudiui: have had an inkling of. This word perhaps belongs to an obsolete, inchoative form (inaudisco), which meant to begin to hear, though indaudiat is found in a fragment of Afranius.

Antipho had of course heard something from Sophrona and from Phanium herself about the latter's origin. Cf. also 389, where the name assumed by Chremes in Lemnos, viz. Stilpo, is shown to have been mentioned in court.

880. adhibendae: for a similar use of habendae, cf. 827.

fecero: see notes on 308 and 516 (conduplicauerit).

883. ita me di ament: for this use of ita, cf. "so" in the formula, "so help me God!" Cf. 165, 954.

bene factum: gone well.

ACT V, SCENE 7.

884. tantam fortunam . . . esse datam: for the force of the infinitive, see note on 153. This passage forms an exception to the rule, since the inf. of exclamation is commonly used only of thoughts of an unpleasant character. But see App.

886. adimere: notice the change of construction. The gerund would be more regular, but occasio sometimes takes the inf. in early Latin, e.g. Plaut. Capt. 422; Curc. 59; Pers. 722, etc.

889. datum erit: it will stay given, erit alone being the verb.

re ipsa: i.e. the turn things have taken.

890. For the bearing of this verse upon the question as to whether masks were worn by actors in the time of Terence, see note on 210.

893. non eo: see notes on 388 and 446.

ACT V, SCENE 8.

894. gratias: the regular phrases are gratiam habere, to feel grateful, lit. to have gratitude (in one's heart), and gratias agere, to express gratitude, lit. drive it (out). The plural is here used because it has to serve as the object of ago as well as habeo.

896. On the position of this verse, see App.

897. quantum potest: see note on 674.

900. at sometimes introduces an expression of surprise, surprise involving an adversative relation — opposition to what was expected.

nos ad te: note the contrast produced by the juxtaposition (see note on 520) of pronouns. We were going to you, and here you have come to us.

902. uerebamini, etc. : see App.

904. heus: mind you! see here!

906. id adeo: precisely this. For the use of adeo, see note on 389.

909. tanto opere: tantopere.

910. dehortatus: trisyllabic. See Introd., p. xlii.

913. eam nunc: see App.

914. quae . . . coram me incusaueras: which you had complained of in my presence (viz. in 413 ff.), coram probably being a preposition instead of an adverb, as it is commonly taken.

915. inluditis: play against, poke fun at, originally construed with the dat.; but it early came to be used with the acc., in the general sense of ridicule.

917. quo redibo ore: the fut. indic. should probably be distinguished here from the present subjunctive. Quo redeam ore would imply deliberation as to what expression of countenance it would be best to wear: i.e. shall I go back looking penitent, arrogant, or how? Quo redibo ore on the other hand is a purely rhetorical question; the real meaning is, how shame-faced I shall look, to go back under such circumstances! The indicative, however, is frequently used in Plautus and Terence in questions of deliberation.

in its relation to the act of redibo itself. It is often impossible to determine which of the two ideas is uppermost in such clauses.

918. ad forum: i.e. where the bankers and money-changers were located.

922. rursum rescribi: to be re-transferred. When Demipho appeared with the money for Phormio, he avowed (714 ff.) that he would never pay over the money without having witnesses of the whole transaction. It seems, accordingly, that he first deposited the money with his banker, and then had him transfer the credit to the account of Phormio. He now wants Phormio to order it re-transferred.

925. sin est ut uelis: a circumlocution for sin uis, calling attention more particularly to the state of things involved in the wish, rather than to the wish itself. Cf. "if you wish" and "if it is true that you wish."

928. quom . . . remiserim: a causal-adversative clause. Causal, if understood as giving the reason for the whole assertion; adversative, in its relation to decipi. See notes on 23, 208, and 917 (end).

nostri honoris causa: Demipho and Chremes would feel disgraced at having a poor daughter-in-law in the family.

alterae: archaic for alteri.

repudium . . . remittere: to break a marriage engagement, lit. to send back, let loose, a separation.

929. dabat: the imperf. is used because the dowry had been agreed upon, but not yet paid. All the arrangements relative to the marriage are conceived of as being in progress in the past.

in = isne (from eo). Cf. audin, uiden, etc., for audisne, uidesne, etc. For this use of the pres. ind., see note on 388.

930. istac magnificentia: that ridiculous bombast of yours.

931. fugitiue: here merely a term of abuse. Cf. the English word "scamp," which originally meant "one who scampers."

932. adeo: to such an extent, viz. as is implied in the air you assume. See note on 389.

irritor: be careful not to understand this as though it were irritatus sum.

933. ut filius . . . habitet: in apposition with the following hoc: that my son may live with her at your house, that has been (and still is) your plan.

935. quin . . . cedo: see notes on 223 and 197.

936. immo uero: in this combination with uero, both syllables of immo seem to be regularly short at the beginning of iambic verses. Cf. Hec. 726; also immo quod in Hec. 437.

in ius ambula: any one who had a grievance against another could thus summon him into court. If the latter would not go peaceably, the plaintiff had a right to carry him there by force.

938-940. indotatis and dotatis: for the substantive use of fem. adjectives, see note on 298.

dotatis: a hint to Chremes that it may be for his interest to drop further proceedings. Phormio knows the perfidy of Chremes and threatens by this hint to reveal it to his wife; but Chremes is so confident that his secret has been well kept, that, as shown by quid id nostra, Phormio's insinuation does not disturb him.

942. nullus sum: see 179.

943. educat: Terence commonly uses educere in this sense.

sepultus sum: nullus sum above (942) implied I'm dead. Phormio turns the screw again, and draws from Chremes this still more despairing groan, (yes) and buried too.

944. adeo: see notes on 389 and 906.

illi: a still more pointed allusion than that previously made in dotatis, and this time Chremes understands. Phormio has said enough to open his eyes.

945. eras and es may be used indifferently in such cases, according to the conception. Cf. 858, tu quoque aderas?

ludos facit: cf. the expression make game of any one.

946. missum te facimus: cf. inventas reddam in 558.

quid uis tibi: see 843.

947. argentum . . . condonamus te represents a fusing together of two constructions. Donare takes either aliquid alicui, to give something to some one, or aliquem aliqua re, to present some one with something. The feeling accordingly grew up, that the acc. of the person and the acc. of the thing were both allowable with such verbs, and to this feeling is due such a use as found in the present sentence. Cf. similar instances in Eun. 17; Hec. 849, etc. This double acc. with verbs of giving is not found in the classical period.

948. malum: see note on 723.

949. sententia: see App.

950. Notice how the metrical accent, without regard to the word-accent, shifts from one syllable to another in a repetition of the same words.

951. ratum: thought out (reor), then (as here) settled.

952. hic haec: when different cases of the same pronoun are used, the nom. regularly precedes any other case, and the acc. precedes any other than the nom.

953. nisi: see note on 475.

954. ita me di ament: bless me! For this use of ita, see note on 165.

inieci scrupulum: an expression borrowed perhaps from the inconvenience caused by a pebble in one's shoe. From this, scrupulus came to be used of anything that causes uneasiness, e.g. anxiety, doubt, scruple, etc.

955. hicine ut: see note on 304.

The second i in hicine is merely the e of ce (hice), weakened.

956. emori: the e being intensive = outright, though its force is often imperceptible.

satius: satis means enough, sufficient; then, satisfactory; then, in a more general sense, according to one's wishes, desirable, or, in the comparative, more desirable, better.

957. praesenti: present, ever ready to act, resolute. Cf. Eun. 769.

959. id celare . . . uxorem. A. & G. 239 d; B. 178 e; G. 339; H. 374,2.

963. For the hiatus after ulcisci, see 146 and note.

attat: see 600.

haereo: I'm in for it. Cf. the more complete expression in 780, in luto haesitas.

Notice the loose use of tenses in this line, unusual in Latin, but common in English. Here the present is more vivid and forcible—the emergency is referred to as already upon him.

964. gladiatorio animo: such purely Roman allusions are very rare in Terence, though common in Plautus.

966-967. hoc fretus . . . quom . . . excessit: quom is here equivalent to an explicative quod, the fact that, or in that. This use was entirely distinct in both origin and development, from the temporal or causal quom (cum), and was always used with the indicative. It is very common in early Latin and is not infrequent even in classical times, especially after such expressions as gratulor, gratias ago, etc. The passage eo . . . cum . . . consecutus est in Cic. de sen. 19, 68 has been corrupted by some editors, owing to a failure to recognize this use. See App.

967. undē = a qua.

969. ex re: see note on 449.

istius: dissyllabic.

970. ain tu: merely a formula expressive of indignation, wonder, or the like. The tu is commonly added only when strongly marked contrast with others is intended. Here Phormio has just addressed Demipho. He now turns to Chremes with and what do you mean?

lubitum fuerit = lubitum sit. See note on 516. This subjunctive takes its modal coloring from feceris, which in turn expresses an adversative relation to the main clause.

971. feminae: uereor occasionally in early Latin, and once in Cicero's Letters, takes a genitive after the analogy of the gen. with piget, etc. Translate show respect for, feel fear because of.

972. quin: following the idea of prevention implied in what has preceded.

nouo modo: it is noteworthy that the fault of which Chremes had been guilty is here set down as a very unusual thing for those times.

974. dabo: render, as in And. 683, Heaut. 950, Eun. 212, etc.

974-975. ita . . . incensam . . . ut ne restinguas: so enraged that you SHALL not. The ne shows that this ut-clause is an expression of determination involving the will, and it must accordingly be translated by shall not, instead of will not. The negative of the latter expression would be non. See App.

976. malum: the mischief! serving also as the antecedent of quod. This verse is identical with Plaut. Most. 655.

duint: see note on 123.

977. tantane adfectum esse: for the use of the inf. with -ne, see note on 153.

978. scelus, strictly referring to the deed, here as often in vulgar speech designates the person guilty of it, viz. scoundrel.

979. publicitus . . . asportarier: i.e. as a public nuisance, a menace to society.

980. prorsum (pro + uorsum): lit. turned forwards; then, straight ahead, not swerving in any direction; then, exactly, precisely, or, as here, absolutely, utterly.

981. in ius eamus: see note on 936.

huc: Phormio proposes that Nausistrata shall act as judge this time.

982. dum: while.

983. enim: this position of enim is un-Ciceronian; see notes on 113 and 465.

una iniuria: one case of assault against Demipho, who had already laid hold of him. Chremes next takes hold, drawing from Phormio the further threat alterast, etc. (984.)

984. agito: bring action.

985. enim uero: see note on 465.

988. taceam: an echo, as it were, of the preceding taces. See notes on 122, 382, etc.

oculum: an eye, his eye. For the singular, cf. "black a man's eye," "black his eye for him." Dziatzko, strangely enough, concludes from this that Phormio must have had only one eye.

989. est ubi: taken together, like $\xi\sigma\tau\iota\nu \delta\tau\epsilon$, as an adverb meaning sometime.

probe: in fine style. Notice the emphatic position.

ACT V, SCENE 9.

990. qui = quis. See note on 129.

991. obstipuisti: the form obstupesco is, for Terence, a better attested spelling than obstupesco, etc. Cf. And. 256; Ad. 613.

992. hicine ut, etc.: see note on 304.

993. creduas: see Introd., p. xxxix, note 2.

998. non . . . temerest quod: it is not without reason, that, etc., the quod-clause being the subject of est.

tam with verbs in the sense of so much, so greatly (= tantum), without a following quam, is very rare in classical times.

999. egon timeo : see note on 122 (end).

1001. tibi narret : taking up the preceding narra, tell it at your bidding? See note on 122.

1004. clam : often a preposition in early Latin, but in Terence only with me and te. In classical times it was used only as an adverb. See App.

1005. mi homo : my good man!

1009. hoc actumst : playing upon Chremes' quid agimus? in 1007, but, as actum est is often used in the sense of it's all over, i.e. there is no further hope, the present expression suggests also this latter meaning.

hodie : see note on 377.

1011. distaedet : dis is intensive as in disputet (Eun. 832), but such compounds are very rare and are not to be found in the best period.

1012. haecine erant itiones, etc. : i.e., this was the cause of the frequent visits, etc.

1014. esse meritum : sc. eum. See note on 255.

1015. quin sit ignoscenda : why should it not be worthy of pardon? This is not so difficult as some commentators have made it. Quin is used as in 209, 429, Heaut. 832, etc., and the subjunctive is like that in cur non gaudeat? e.g. Cic. Cat. 4, 1, 2. For a discussion of such subjunctives see American Journal of Philology, Vol. XV. (Latin Prohibitive, Part II.).

uerba fiunt mortuo : Demipho's attempt to palliate his brother's guilt reminds Phormio of a funeral oration (laudatio funebris), in which it was customary to sound the praises and conceal the faults of the dead. The words are made still further appropriate by the fact that Chremes in the meantime is standing by, as speechless and motionless as a dead man (cf. 994 and 1026), and probably wishing he were one.

1016. tua . . . tuo : used objectively.

1019. fuit . . . scrupulus : caused all the trouble. See note on 954.

defungier: to be now having my last experience (of this sort of thing). For other absolute uses of this verb, see Eun. 15 and cf. the common use of defunctus, deceased, lit. one who has finished.

1024. mea: emphatic, my own. B. 350, 5 c; G. 676, R. 1, with 672, 2 a.

1026-1029. At such unanswerable questions from Nausistrata, Demipho is for the moment dumbfounded and in his confusion finds nothing to say. This suggests to Phormio that the funeral oration (1015) is now finished, and he playfully calls upon the audience to join the procession to the place of burial. After Phormio has made the most of this, he pauses (at the end of 1028) and looks for some time at Chremes, who is now bowed down with humiliation and disgrace; then, pretending to be moved to pity at the sight of such an object, he suddenly changes his tone, still speaking, however, to the audience: (Poor fellow!) let him by all means make up with her now, I am satisfied. The corroborating particle sane (instead of sed, or the like) may seem somewhat strange, but it falls short of justifying Dziatzko's claim that a verse given to Demipho must have fallen out between 1028 and 1029. The sane is sufficiently explained by supposing it to corroborate the unspoken wish which many present would feel at the sight of Chremes in his present condition.

exsequias: a reminiscence of the time when the acc. of any noun, except the name of a living thing, could be used without a preposition to express limit of motion. Later, this use was limited, except in poetry, to names of towns and small islands and a few other words, e.g. domum, rus.

1027. sic dabo: that's the way I'll give it to him.

1028. faxo . . . sit mactatus. Notice the air of braggadocio given by the use of the tense of future accomplishment instead of the mere future. See note on 516. On the reading of the Mss., see App.

1030. quod . . . obganniat: a potential characterizing clause. See note on 488.

dum . . . uiuat: dum in the sense of so long as takes the indicative, but the mood of uiuat is here colored by the subjunctive clause in which it stands.

usque: continually, seems to modify the whole phrase ad aurem obganniat. One would gladly take usque ad in its usual sense of all the way to, but it seems impossible here to make sense out of such a conception.

ad aurem: for this use of ad, to, cf. the expression, "abuse a man to his face."

1031. meo merito credo: sc. haec facta esse.

1032. aeque . . . cum: peculiar to colloquial Latin.

1033. gentium: akin to a genitive of the whole, or partitive genitive, as it is commonly called. A. & G. 216, a. 4; B. 201; G. 372, n. 3; H. 397, 4.

1036. priusquam dat: cf. 1037.

1040. filius homo adulescens si: for the force of the position of these words, see note on 200.

1041. unam amicam . . . uxores duas: notice the chiasmus, contrasting duas with unam, and uxores with amicam.

1043. immo: introducing a refusal to comply with Demipho's ignosce in 1035. The interruptions had prevented her answering before.

ecastor: a word used only by women, who seem never to have used hercle. Pol, on the other hand, was common among both sexes.

quod potero: so far as I shall be able. This quod seems akin to an acc. of extent. Cf. Ad. 511.

1051. faciamque et dicam: this -que et, both . . . and, occurs several times in Terence. See App.

1052-3. quod gaudeam, quod . . . doleant: gaudeo is seldom found with the acc. in classical times, though doleo in this construction is common.

1054. See App.

1055. iudex noster: cf. 1045.

faxo : see note on 308.

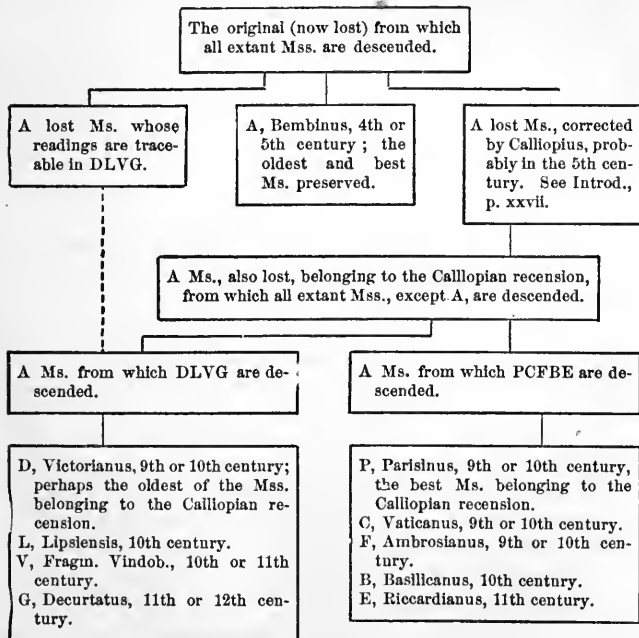

cantor : if we may believe Livy (7, 2), the cantica (see Introd., p. xxxviii) were, at least sometimes, sung not by the actor, but by someone called the cantor, the actor merely accompanying the song with appropriate gestures. It was this cantor, apparently, who came forward at the end of the play and asked the audience for plaudits of approval. As he was the last to speak, the Mss. of Terence designate the cantor by ω .

uos ualete et plaudite : some such address to the audience was customary at the close of all Roman plays. In Plautus this address is commonly somewhat elaborate, but in Terence it is simplified to the words before us or, in the Andria, the Hecyra, and the Adelphoe, to the single word plaudite.

APPENDIX.

As intimated in the preface, this appendix is devoted almost exclusively to the citation of authorities for statements made in the notes, where such citation seems desirable, and to the defense of readings, adopted in this edition, which are at variance with the text of Dziatzko.

As the testimony of the manuscripts is frequently referred to below, it will be well to keep in mind the relative importance of the different families. The following diagram is offered with a view to making clearer the relationship between them.

Of the manuscripts

CPD are preserved entire ;

A lacks And. 1-887, Hec. Prol. I and II, 1-30, Ad. 915-997 ;

B lacks Eun. 937-1094, Heaut. 1-229 ;

E lacks And. 1-183, Phorm. 900-1055 ;

F lacks all of the Andria, Eun. 1-416, Phorm. 832-1055 ;

G lacks Eun. 848-1021, Heaut. 1-313, 1049-1667, Phorm. 779-1055, Hec. 1-194, 309-880 ;

V is a fragment containing And. 912-981 and Ad. 26-158.

About certain details of the diagram above given there is opportunity for differences of opinion, but, in a general way, it represents fairly well the views now prevailing. I have followed Prinzhorn, Dziatzko, Schlee, and others, in making DG represent an older family than PC. Pease, however, in a paper on the Relative Value of the Manuscripts of Terence (Transactions of the American Philological Association, 1887), has proved conclusively that P is far more trustworthy than any other Ms., with the exception of A. It is extremely probable, too, that the pictures in PCF (see note on dramatis personae) have come from a Ms. of the best period (Leo, Rh. Mus. xxxviii ; Schlee, Scholia Terentiana ; et al.), though it seems equally probable that the text of PCF has not been materially influenced by this early Ms. ; see, for instance, Schlee, pp. 6 f. For the literature that has appeared on this subject since the publication of Dziatzko's edition, see the end of this volume.

DIDASCALIA.

ATILIVS: Dziatzko reads HATILIVS. The initial H rests solely upon the authority of A in the didascaliae of the Eunuchus and of the Adelphoe, and upon the mark preceding the name in B ('ATTILIVS) and in C ('ANTILIVS) in the didascalia of the Eunuchus.¹ No weight whatever, in my opinion, is to be attached to this evidence. The scribe of A resembled the Arrius of Catullus (83, 2), in having a decided fondness for an initial h (which he writes K). In no less than 17 places, he uses h where it does not belong: his for is (nom. sing.), And. 935, Eun. 205, Phorm. 461 ; habeo for abeo, Heaut. 928, Hec. 586 ; hem for em, Eun. 237, 835 ; Stilpho for Stilpo, Phorm. 389, 390, 740; Pampahilum for Pamphilum, Hec. 804. Cf. hunc for nunc, And. 936; huc for duc, Phorm. 410; hico for dico, Hec. 232; also phidicina, Phorm. Per. 5, 11; Ad. Per. 7; these last, however, belong to a different class of phenomena.

In 10 of the instances just cited, A is the only one of the Mss. which shows this incorrect use of h in the word concerned. It appears then, strangely enough, that the best of all the Mss. of Terence contains the largest number of errors in these particular instances. The evidence of B and C is, generally speaking, still more worthless. In B, the most unreliable of all the Mss. in this respect, there are no fewer than 80 instances of the incorrect use of h, and in C there are 45; e.g. his for is (nom. sing.), And. 51, Phorm. 722; herus for erus, And. 175, 183, 208, 412, 423, 508, 602, etc.; hei for ei, And. 322, 622, Heaut. 234; hostium for ostium, And. 507, 682, Ad. 637; heu for eu, Eun. 154, Phorm. 398, 478; humerus for umerus, Eun. 314, Phorm. 844; habeo for abeo, Eun. 342, 494, Heaut. 212, 928, Hec. 224, Ad. 786; hecqua for ecqua, Eun. 521; hisdem for eisdem, Heaut. 300; habundo for abundo, Heaut. 528; heuge for euge, Heaut. 677; Chorinthum for Corinthum, Hec. 86. Other forms of similar character abound in the other Mss., e.g. hausculto for ausculto, Haeschinus for Aeschinus, haedes for aedes, adhulescens for adulescens. The number of instances of the incorrect use of h in the different Mss. is as follows:

B, 80.

E, 59.

F, 46.

G, 50.

C, 45.

P, 15.

D, 50.

A, 17 (not counting the two instances of Hatilius).

It will be seen from the above showing that a stronger case might be made out in favor of writing, for instance, his for is (nom. sing.) than has been made out in favor of Hatilius. There is, so far as I know, no real evidence that Hatilius was ever a recognized form, though it does occur once in inscriptions (C.I.L. X, 8067, 11). Atilius is common enough at all periods. For the untrustworthiness of our Mss. in such matters, see especially Corsen, Ausprache, etc., 1, pp. 110 f.

PERIOCHA.

G: the abbreviation for Gaius was C (by which character the g-sound was in early times represented) throughout classical Latin, and this character continued to be the regular abbreviation in imperial times. At the time, however, when the periochae of Terence were written, the character G was also often used. Cf. C.I.L., Indices. Codex A has G in the five periochae it has preserved.

7. eam uisām Antipho: Fleckeisen and Dziatzko insert cum before uisam, and Opitz (Leipziger Studien, VI, p. 213 sq.) inserts it before Antipho, to avoid violating the rules that have been laid down by various editors of Plautus and Terence, and summed up by Lindsay (Latin Language, p. 209), regarding the hiatus. This seems to me a needless tampering with the manuscripts, which unanimously present the reading adopted in the text. The hiatus in visām Antipho may be easily paralleled. The recent critical edition of Plautus' Amphitruo, Asinaria, Aulularia, Bacchides, Captivi and Casina by Goetz and Schoell, shows that in these six plays alone there are numerous instances that will not conform to the "rules," e.g.:

93, Ita nunc belligerant Aetolī cūm | Āleis.

31, Summoque genere captum ēsse ēquītēm | Āleum.

Bacch. 987, Nunc superum limen scinditur, nunc adest ēxitīūm | Īlio.

Cas. Arg. 1, Conseruam uxorem duo conserui | expetunt.

48, Placere posset eam puellam | hic senex.

Amph. 897, Sed eccum uideo, qui me miseram | arguit.

Other similar examples in Plautus are As. 698, Bacch. 852. The hiatus after m is of course very common in cases like Plaut. Mil. 1012, 1028; Men. 26, geminum | alterum (changed by Ritschl), 565, Capt. 395. It is a well-known fact that m in dactylic verse was often not elided, e.g. Lucil. 1, 32 (M.) canēs quām hōmo, Enn. Ann. 354 (M.) mīlitūm octo, 322 dum quīdē unus, Lucr. 2, 681 sūnt cūm ōdore, 3, 394 ēt quām in, 3, 1082 séd dūm ābest, 6, 276 simūl cūm ēo, Hor. Sat. 2, 2, 28 coctō nūm ādest. For other examples from Lucretius, Catullus and Vergil, see Munro on Lucr. 2, 404; for a discussion of this whole subject, Corssen, Aussprache etc., p. 790 f., and Studemund's Studien, 1, p. 22. The non-elision of m is common in Terence in cases like And. Per. 4, nām āīā (see Spengel's critical note in his second edition), Phorm. 808 illī quām ēgo, 982 retinē dūm ēgo; cf. 27, 383, 419, 501, etc. Objection may be raised to the reading adopted in the text, on the ground that no example has been cited from Terence which presents exactly the same conditions in every respect. But it must be remembered that this periocha was not written by Terence, but by a grammarian of the 2d century A.D., who was trying to imitate early usage. At any rate, when the Mss. of an author, written centuries apart, belonging to entirely different families, and having entirely different histories, have all preserved a verse in exactly the same form without a hint of any variant, their evidence should not be disregarded without more imperative reasons than exist in the present case.

12. adgnitam (ACD): an attempt to imitate earlier usage. At the time of Sulpicius Apollinaris, agnitam had become the common orthography.

PROLOGUE.

2. transdere: transdere ueteres sonantius, quod nos lenius tradere, etc. (Donatus). The Mss. have here tradere, but in Heaut. 740, DG have transducenda.

17. tractant: A (first hand) has tractent, and perhaps this is the correct reading, though the subjunctive here would be exceptional in Terence. See note.

18-34. A facsimile of these verses, as found in A, is given in Zangemeister and Wattenbach's Exempla Codicum Latinorum, Tab. VIII.

21. The Mss. all read id in this verse, A having it before sibi, the others before rellatum. It seems to be an interpolation.

33. restituūt: Havet in the Revue de Philologie, 10 (1886), p. 15, suggests restituāt.

44. Charisius, p. 32 K, defines genius as ἡ τύχη ἐκάστου.

49. ubi initiabunt: see Donatus on this passage, and Dziatzko's critical note. For initiation of children into mysteries, see Smith's Dictionary of Greek and Roman Antiquities (3d ed. 1891), I, p. 722; Boeckh, Corpus Inscriptionum Graecarum, 393, 400, 443, 444, 445, 448.

71. hic, the reading of A (first hand), is more probably correct than hinc of the other Mss. The hinc might easily have been substituted for hic through the influence of such passages as And. 317, Eun. 206, 494, 716, Heaut. 211, 212, 586, Ad. 841, Phorm. 1054 and elsewhere. Its position, too, points to a connection with relinquunt rather than with abeuntes.

77. It is possible that the words namque, etc., should be given to Geta.

86. Dziatzko, Wagner, Sloman, Bond and Walpole, Lindersstrom-Lang, and others write redducere instead of reducere. I see no sufficient reason for adopting this orthography in the present case. The manuscript evidence is confirmed by the explicit testimony of the grammarians. Nothing could be more to the point than the words of Priscian, 1, p. 47: redduco quod etiam reduco dicitur . . . Terentius in Phormione "sectari . . . ac reducere." Donatus, too, in quoting this passage (Hec. 4, 1, 36) has reducere, and that he, as well as Priscian, appreciated the point involved is clear from the fact that he elsewhere (e.g. Phorm. 21) distinctly recognizes the other orthography as also used in certain passages (e.g. rellatum in 21, and relliquiae in Verg. Aen. 1, 34). Both methods of spelling such words are found not merely in different authors of the same period, e.g. redducere in Lucr. 1, 228; 4, 992 (see Lachmann on 5, 614), rēducere in Catull., but also in different passages of the same author, e.g. rellatus in Lucr. 2, 1001, rēlatus in 5, 686. Cf. also such forms as reccidere, in Lucr. 1, 857 and 5, 280 with rēcident in Plaut. Men. 520, and rēcidit in Enn. Ann. 223 (Baehrens); relliquiae in Verg. Aen. 1, 30; 3, 87, and Lucr. 6, 825 (rē. or rell.) with rēliquiae in Plaut. Rud. 1274 (1287) and Ter. Ad. 444.

87. The verse of the Greek original, imperfectly preserved by Donatus, is completed by Dziatzko as follows: ἡμεῖς δὲ [σύσχολοι] συνεπεμελούμεθα (Rh. Mus. XXX, pp. 370 ff.).

131. Some editors, among them Dziatzko, punctuate with a colon after confingam and a comma after commodum.

156. The Mss. have est after istuc, and consciis sis at the end of the verse. Bentley dropped the est and was followed by editors until Schlee (de versuum in canticis Terentianis consecutione, 1879) showed that quid istuc? was used merely as an expression of surprise, quid istuc est? as a real question, thus vindicating the reading of the Mss. in the present passage. The interpolation of sis at the end is due to a misunderstanding of the consciis (i.e. consciu's for consciis es) and the consequent desire to complete the clause. Dziatzko, while retaining est, expresses the view, "dass auch quid istuc? der Ausdruck der Verwunderung, hier nicht gerade unangemessen wäre." How, then, would he explain Antipho's reply?

170. For istaec, etc., see Neue, Formenlehre, 3d ed. by Wagener (1892), II, pp. 398 ff. Fr. Schmidt, Quaest. de pron. dem. for. Plaut. (1875), p. 80 f., tries to show that Terence, as well as Plautus, uses only istaec, never ista, in neut. plur., but see Ad. 185 and 677.

175. retinere an amorem amittere: the Mss. have retinere amare amittere. Goldbacher, Wiener Studien, VII (1885), p. 162, seems to me to make out a strong case in favor of the reading I have adopted. Dziatzko reads retinere amorem an mittere; but this disturbs the parallelism between these infinitives and the amittendi nec retinendi in the next verse.

193. Mähly (Blätter für das bay. Gymnasialwesen, 24 [1888], p. 478 f.) arbitrarily changes nescio to hau scio.

199. Cod. A (first hand) has et patruom tuom, which reading is preferred by C. Sydow, De fide libr. Ter. etc., p. 34, and by Hauler (Wiener Studien, IV [1882], p. 322 f.), who support this reading by Plaut. Trin. 111.

215. sed hic quis est senex: Dziatzko reads sed quis hic, etc., rejecting, with Seyffert (Stud. Plaut., Berlin, 1874) the reading of A. I have preferred to follow A for the following reasons: (1) In the matter of the relative position of words, this Ms. is overwhelmingly superior to the best of the other Mss. See Pease, on the Relative Value of the Mss. of Terence (Transactions of the Am. Phil. Assoc. for 1887, p. 33); (2) This is a case where the scribes of the other Mss., who show a constant tendency to tamper with the order of words, would be sure to invert the order, to make it normal. On the other hand, if the original reading had been sed quis hic, etc., it would be difficult to account for the change to sed hic quis, in a Ms. so noted for its accuracy in such matters; (3) Finally, the order of words in A is far more effective, indicating the surprise of the speaker, "but this man — who is the old fellow?" Cf. Cic. in Verr. 2, 4, 3, 2, Canephorae ipsae uocabantur; sed earum artificem, quem?

215–216. On the manuscript variations in these lines, see Havet in the Revue de Philologie, 11 (1887), p. 48.

243. I have not followed Dziatzko in bracketing this line, as the grounds adduced seem to me insufficient. Not only do the Mss. speak for its authenticity, but it is clear from Cic. Tusc. Disp. 3, 14, 30, that the verse stood in Cicero's copy of Terence, and that he regarded it as genuine.

245. Cicero (Tusc. Disp. 3, 14, 30) has Communia esse haec, ne quid horum unquam accidat animo nouom. Cicero, however, may have been quoting from memory. His authority on the exact wording of a verse deserves less consideration than that of the best copyists, who were professedly reproducing what they actually had before them.

328. Dziatzko brackets this line as an interpolation, objecting to the use of tum and of noui. But such a use of tum is easily paralleled, e.g. And. 262; Cic. Philip. 3, 3, 7, and the object of noui is the pedum uia, which, as is shown in the following verse, is still uppermost in his thoughts: "The better I know the path, the oftener I tread it."

345. On the "subjunctive of obligation or propriety," see my discussion of the Latin Prohibitive, in the American Journal of Philology, Vol. XV. (No. 58), 1.

367. For the "classifying" relative clause, see Hale, The Cum-Constructions, p. 92; see also P. Barth, N. Jahrb. f. Phil., 1884, p. 181 f.

368. Vt, the reading of the Mss., is regarded by Dziatzko as a gloss to explain atque.

381. For exceptions to the rule for the sequence of tenses, see Hale, Sequence of Tenses, Am. Journ. Phil., Vols. VII. and VIII.

410. On this line, see Mähly in Blätter für das bay. Gymnasialwesen, XXIV (1888), p. 478.

413. On the monosyllabic ending, see P. Fabia, Revue de Philologie, 17 (1893), p. 29.

419. For non agam? see the discussion of so-called deliberative questions with non in the Am. Journ. Phil., Vol. XV. (Latin Prohibitive, Part II.).

423. The Mss. collated by Umpfenbach have iam ducenda with the exception of D, which has iam ducendū. There is no authority for the ad (iam ad ducendum) inserted by editors. I have accordingly adopted the reading of the Lipsiensis (L) iam ducendi aetas. The slurred pronunciation of the i before aetas would easily account for the a (of A) and for the ū (of D). Such a genitive of the gerund depending upon tempus, spatium, and similar words, is common in Plautus and Terence. Cf. Platner, Notes on the Use of Gerund and Gerundive in Plautus and Terence (Am. Journ. Phil. XV., p. 483 ff.).

440. On the question of scene-division at this point, see below (884).

488. The term "predicating characterizing," found in my notes, is adopted from Hale.

500. I believe me to be an interpolation. This seems the most reasonable explanation of the variations of the Mss. In A me is placed immediately after ut, in L (Lipsiensis) it is before ut, in D¹G it is omitted altogether, but G² adds it after ducas; in the other Mss. it appears after dictis. This is just what we should expect if me had not stood in the original text. The copyists, not recognizing the absolute use of ducere, took it upon themselves to insert an object for it. Ducere is often used absolutely in its other significations, and other words meaning "deceive," e.g. fallere, decipere, are similarly used. With the omission of me, the sense is "To think that you are so bold-faced, etc., that you are trying to deceive (allure) with your glittering words, and to lead off my girl for nothing."

501. On the force of ne feceris, see Am. Journ. Phil., Vol. XV. (Latin Prohibitive, Part I.). On the origin and sphere of the so-called gnomic perf. (aorist), see my note in the Proceedings of the Am. Phil. Assoc. for 1894.

ueris: all the Mss. have this reading. Dziatzko rejects it in favor of uerbis (uerbis having been substituted by a second hand for the original reading of G), owing to Barth's claim that the neuter of an adj. is not used substantively in Terence, except when used "in generellem Sinne." Vera is frequently used substantively in both Plautus and Terence, and it seems safer to admit exceptions to a rule involving fine distinctions, than to change the Mss. to make them conform to it in every case.

502. neque: Dziatzko adopts Wagner's conjecture and writes atque, but the reading of the Mss. seems tenable, if we understand alia as explained in my note: "To think that this trouble, if it had to come at all, did not come at a time when Antipho was having less trouble of his own, that he might devote himself more exclusively to helping me." I see no real objection to this interpretation in the "fortunatissime Antipho" of vs. 504. Phaedria is startled into this exclamation by the sudden appearance of Antipho, and his only thought for the instant was that Antipho's lot was, after all, happy indeed as compared with his own, for he at least had possession of his loved one.

507. Dziatzko follows Bentley in rejecting this verse.

519. In his stereotyped edition of all the plays, Dziatzko gives the words Di tibi . . . duint to Geta, but in his separate edition of the Phormio he follows A and Umpfenbach in giving them to Phaedria.

561. Codex A reads inpone feret, while BCDEFP have inpone et feret. I have adopted ei —feret, suggested by Mähly (Blätter f. das bay. Gymnasialwesen, XXIV (1888), p. 478).

567. Chremes: there can hardly be any doubt that Terence used two forms of the vocative (-e and -es) in such Greek words, just as he used two forms of the accusative, but it is in many passages extremely difficult to determine the better reading. See, in addition to the authorities cited by Dziatzko, Engelbrecht's review of Dziatzko's edition in the Berliner Phil. Wochenschrift V, p. 326 ff., Minton Warren's review of Hauler's Terentiana in the Am. Journ. Phil. III. (1882), p. 483, Hauler's Paläographisches zum Bembinus des Terenz in Wiener Studien, XI (1889), p. 286, and the same writer's Textkritisches zum Bembinus des Terenz in Wiener Studien, XII (1890), p. 242.

598. ad forum: this reading was adopted by Dziatzko in his stereotyped edition of all the plays, but in his separate edition of the Phormio it has been changed (on the authority of Wilh. Abraham in N. Jahrb. Sup. Bd. 14, p. 207) to apud forum, for the alleged reason that ad forum is used "nur bei Verben der Bewegung." But ad in the sense of apud, at, near, is common enough at all periods; see Krebs-Schmalz, Antibarbarus, p. 76, with the authorities there cited. The phrase esse ad forum occurs in Plaut. Most. 829, and ad forum is the unanimous reading of the Mss. in the present passage. Furthermore, apud forum cannot stand here for metrical reasons. The common rule (given, for instance, by Dziatzko, p. 26, by Hayley, p. 10), that the proceleusmatic is allowed by Terence in every foot of an iambic senarius except the last, has no basis so far as the fifth foot is concerned. See Introd., p. xxxiv and note.

611. compluria: Dziatzko follows the second hand of A in giving this word to Chremes, but the punctuation I have adopted makes it possible to follow the reading of the Mss. For the form compluria, see Donatus on the passage; Charis. p. 125 (Keil); Prisc. 1, pp. 350 and 315; Neue-Wagener, Formenlehre, II, p. 271.

699. iam si: see Munro, on Lucr. 1, 968.

768. My interpretation of this difficult passage was suggested by Sandford's note in the Classical Review, III (1889).

783. eius: Bothe's alteration of eius to huius, adopted by Dziatzko, seems quite unnecessary. See note.

818. potuit: all the Mss. but A have id potuit.

884. I have, with Dziatzko, followed A in making this the beginning of a new scene, but I do not feel sure that such a division is correct. The illustrated Mss. make no division here, and there can be little doubt that the pictures of the characters placed at the beginning of each scene in these Mss. are taken from a Ms. of the best period (Leo, Rh. Mus., XXXVIII; Schlee, Scholia Terentiana [1893], p. 5). While it does not necessarily follow that these pictures are safer guides, in the matter of scene-division (Schlee, Scholia Terentiana, p. 6) than the superscriptions in A, their testimony should have considerable weight. Umpfenbach and Dziatzko both accept their evidence at 441 against A, which makes no division at that point. A somewhat serious objection to making 884 the beginning of a new scene is that it compels us to recognize the use of the exclamatory infinitive to express a thought pleasing to the speaker. There seems to be no inherent reason why the infinitive should not be so used, but as a matter of fact it does not occur, so far as I can find, anywhere in Latin, with the possible exception of tene asumbolum uenire, in Phorm. 339. Even there, the speaker seems to be almost deprecating the hard lot of a rex. In Tac. Dial. 6, 15, coire populum is better taken with quod gaudium. See Bennett's note on this latter passage.

896. This verse is found in the Mss. after 905; but it is clear that it properly comes before Phormio joins in the conversation.

902. I have retained the reading of A. Dziatzko, following C. F. W. Müller, rejects this reading because it requires the shortening of the second e in uerebâmini, which, it is claimed, cannot be allowed for Terence. Accordingly, uerebâmini is changed to an rebamini; and as this alteration makes the ne non id facerem of the next verse unintelligible, these latter words are changed to me non id facere, against the uniform reading of the Mss. There are seven instances in Terence of the shortening of the second syllable of a polysyllabic word when that syllable is "long by position," and the ictus falls on the third: uôlûptâti, in Heaut. 71, And. 944, 960, Hec. 593; uênûstâtis, in Hec. 848; sênêctûtem, in Phorm. 434; măgistrâtus, in Eun. 22. It seems easier to suppose that a vowel "long by nature" was occasionally shortened, under similar circumstances, than to do away with all exceptions to the rule by making arbitrary changes in the Mss. Cf. Plaut. Men. 37, Syrăcûsas; also Amph. 930 pûdicitiam (according to some editors).

913. eam nunc: Dziatzko, in his last edition, following BCDP, reads nunc uiduam. I have followed A. The word uiduam, in the inferior Mss., looks like a gloss upon eam nunc.

949. sententia: this is the reading of all the Mss., but it has been arbitrarily changed by Fleckeisen, whom Dziatzko follows, to inconstantia. I see no serious difficulty in sententia, which is used in the sense of decision, determination, and which, when modified by puerili, becomes nearly synonymous with inconstantia. For sententia in the sense of determination, purpose, see Auct. ad Her. 3, 24, 40; Cic. Off. 3, 33, 116.

bert, Gr. Stud. II, pp. 95-106; Hale, The Cum-Constructions (1889), p. 243.

974-975. For a discussion of Brix's claim that ne is sometimes used in consecutive clauses, see Am. Journ. Phil., Vol. XV. (Latin Prohibitive, Part. II.).

1004. hem quid ais: Dziatzko assigns these words to Nausistrata, against the Mss., on the ground that this question seems inappropriate for Demipho after vs. 941 f. It must be remembered, however, that hem and quid ais? often express mere indignation, and do not necessarily imply surprise. The fact that Nausistrata is now present and will hear what Phormio is about to say, sufficiently accounts for Demipho's exclamation.

1028. fazo tali sit mactatus: the oldest and best Ms. (A) has this reading; the later Mss. have fazo tali eum mactatum, though in D this was not the original reading. The latter reading is less probable, for the further reason that it would necessitate making hic long, whereas it is regularly short in Terence (see note on 266). See Dziatzko, Rh. Mus. XXXIX (1884), p. 341.

1028-1029. Dziatzko's claim that a verse has fallen out between these two verses does not seem to me to be justified. See stage directions for the line and note on the passage.

1051. On the use of -que et in Terence, see my paper on The Copulative Conjunctions in the Inscriptions of the Republic, in Terence and in Cato, § 28, Am. Journ. Phil., Vol. VIII.

1054. Dziatzko, following BCDP, assigns the words eamus intro hinc to Demipho. I follow A in giving them to Phormio. The fact that Phormio is to go in another direction a moment later makes no difficulty. After he has uttered the words, Nausistrata's question prompts him to change his purpose and hurry off in search of Phaedria.
